In view of the long and distinguished services of the late Admiral Wyman, husband of claimant, the recommendation of the late Secretary of the Navy, W. E. Chandler, and of the favorable action of Congress in many similar cases, granting the rate of pension proposed by this bill, your committee recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY S. WELLS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Wells, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Clark H. Wells, of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month; said pension to be in lieu of any pension she may hereafter receive.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill of precisely the same character as the last preceding one. I move that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the report read.

Mr. FINLEY. There is, however, a slight amendment which should be made in the last line of the bill. The words "hereafter receive" should be struck out and the words "now be receiving" substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist on the reading of the report?

Mr. TAULBEE. If the reading of the report is to be dispensed with, I should like to have some gentleman who is acquainted with the facts in the case give some reason why this claimant should receive $50 a month, when the widows of officers of the same rank as that held by this officer receive only $30 a month.

Mr. FINLEY. This is a rear-admiral's widow, and there are a great many precedents for this pension.

Mr. MORRILL. There are some sixty or seventy precedents.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes; and I think it is about time to stop adding to that line of precedents, unless we propose to pass a general law of that character and treat all alike.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest to the gentleman that it would be very invidious to make a discrimination against the applicant in this case. Rear-Admiral Wells was an officer of great distinction, who rendered eminent service to the country. I have personal knowledge of the extent and value of the service which he rendered.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the report is very long.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, on the question of dependence, the question of the financial condition of this claimant, let us hear a statement, or hear the portion of the report read which refers to that.

Mr. FINLEY. Let the report be read on that point.

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall not insist on the reading of the whole of the report.

The report was read in part, and was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells, have considered the same, and report as follows:

By this bill it is proposed to pay Mary S. Wells, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Clark H. Wells, of the United States Navy, a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of any pension which she may hereafter receive.

Rear-Admiral Clark H. Wells, United States Navy, was born in Pennsylvania. He was appointed a midshipman from Pennsylvania, September 25, 1840; attached to the North Carolina, 1840; frigate Brandywine and sloop Fairfield, 1840-'41; razee Independence, Home Squadron, 1842-'43; sloop Levant, Pacific Squadron, 1844-'45; Naval School, Annapolis, 1846.

Graduated and became passed midshipman July 11, 1846. During Mexican war: in brig Somers, blockading Vera Cruz, in 1846; in gunboat Petrel 1846-'47, during which time she joined Tatnall's flotilla in the attack upon the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa and the city of Vera Cruz; took part also in the capture of Tuspan and Tampico. To the East Indies and "around the world" in the sloop Plymouth and brig Dolphin, 1848-'51; receiving-ship Philadelphia, 1852; store-ship Fredonia at Valparaiso, 1852-'55.

Commissioned as lieutenant September 14, 1855; Naval Observatory, Washington, 1856; in 1856 attached to bark Resolute (originally English man-of-war, abandoned in the Arctic Sea and subsequently recovered and brought to the United States by the American whale-ship George Henry; Congress, by joint resolution, dated August 28, 1856, having purchased her from the salvors and ordered her restoration to the British Government, she sailed for England, November 13, 1856); in steam-frigate Susquehanna and Water Witch, Home Squadron, 1858; steamer Metacomet, Paraguay expedition, 1859. During the rebellion commanded sloop Vandalia, South Atlantic Blockading Squadron, 1861-'62; was executive officer of the steamer Susquehanna in the battle of Port Royal; this vessel, the Susquehanna, struck thirty-six times and badly cut up, was specially mentioned in Admiral Du Pont's official report; was sent several times with sailors and marines to re-enforce the Unadilla when much exposed to night attacks in Wright's River, South Carolina; commanded sloop Dale, 1862, and brought her to Philadelphia.

Commissioned as lieutenant-commander July 16, 1862; navy-yard, Philadelphia, 1863; commanded Galena when rebuilt as wooden gunboat in West Gulf Squadron, 1864; frequently drew the fire of Fort Morgan while running in the shelling blockade-runners under the fort's guns; took part in the Mobile fight. During the passage of the forts, the Galena and Oneida, lashed together, brought up the rear and suffered severely from the fire of the forts and the Tennessee, a shell from the latter exploding the Oneida's boiler, so that she was towed in by her consort. After Captain Mullany, of the Oneida, had his arm shot away opposite the forts, the command of both vessels devolved upon Lieutenant-Commander Wells. The Galena's services were specially mentioned in Admiral Farragut's official report. Commander Wells also received a commendatory letter from the admiral himself, in which he says:

"'That in your case I depart from my usual custom, not to give letters for good conduct in time of war, where there is an immediate commander first to forward it; but inasmuch as Captain Mullany was wounded, and the command of the two vessels (Oneida and Galena) devolved upon you and were carried through the battle with great gallantry, I take great pleasure in giving my official testimony to your very meritorious conduct in that engagement, and trust that in the future it may be of service to you.'

"East Gulf Squadron, 1864; refitted in Philadelphia and joined Admiral Porter's squadron on the James River; remained there until the close of the war. Commanded the steamer Kansas, and visited nearly all the ports of the South Atlantic Station during 1864, 1865, and 1866; received a letter of thanks from the English Government and English admiral for going to the assistance of Her British Majesty's gunboat Gleaner, reported to be dangerously ashore in Moledona Bay; he and his officers and crew also received thanks, on this cruise, for rescuing an English bark from English Bank, river La Plata.

"Commissioned as commander July 25, 1866; navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., 1868, 1869, and 1870; detailed for the command of the Shenandoah in spring of 1870.

"Remained in command of Shenandoah for nearly four years. Received a vote of thanks from the Italian Government for assistance rendered to Italian vessels of war. For service rendered to the French Government he received the decoration of "Officer of the Legion of Honor" from President Thiers, which Congress, by a joint resolution, allowed him to accept. After his return from sea he was executive officer of the Boston and Philadelphia navy-yards, and then commanded the League Island yard for a period of two years. He then was made chief signal officer of the Navy, which he held for three years. Then he was ordered to command the Portsmouth, N. H., navy-yard, which position he held until he was placed on the retired-list in September, 1883.

Total service at sea, twenty-two years and six months. Total service on shore fourteen years and eight months. Unemployed, nine years and seven months.

In his report to the Surgeon-General, United States Navy, concerning the death of Rear-Admiral Wells and the cause thereof, A. C. Gorgas, medical director, United States Navy, states:

"As long ago as in the year 1862, Admiral (then Lieutenant and Lieutenant-Commander) Wells was affected with palpitation of the heart and other distressing cardiac symptoms. He was then in command of the sloop Vandalia, of which I was the senior medical officer. His troubles were due to the combined exposure and confinement incident to life on the blockade, at one time a period of three months elapsing without any visit to the shore being possible. In 1867, while he was in command of the Kansas at Rio de Janeiro, I examined him and conferred with the assistant surgeon of that ship for the same symptoms.

"At Portsmouth, N. H., in 1869 and 1870, and in Europe, while he was in command of the Shenandoah, he suffered from time to time with the same.

"While he was in command of the Portsmouth (N. H.) navy-yard, in 1882, '83, and '84, I several times was sent for by him to be consulted with in regard to his disease. By this time the physical signs, which on former occasions were negative, became pronounced, and his disease made out as cardiac dilatation. Since then his disease has been continuous, complicated with nephritis as a secondary affection, and with supervening pneumonia.

"I consider that his disease originated as stated above, and has been intensified by arduous service and the rigorous climate of New Hampshire, where the high winds of winter at one time seriously aggravated his disease and caused a very dangerous attack of bronchitis."

In view of the long and meritorious services of Admiral Wells, and of the fact that his death resulted from disease contracted in the service of the United States, your committee report this bill favorably, and recommend its passage.

Mr. FINLEY. As a matter of courtesy to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLISS] I took charge of this case. The report is full and complete. A list of precedents is given of other officers, who did not rank as high, where this increased pension has been allowed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The question of dependence hardly arises on a bill of this kind. This is the case of a widow.

I expect my friend may say this is an increase of pension. Well, an increase of pension goes to the same merit as the original pension. A pension to a widow is not granted by reason of dependence, and is not affected by the financial condition of the widow. It is granted as her right in view of what her husband did.

I have spoken from the general interest I have in seeing justice done to an officer whose valuable services I have reason to know.

Admiral Wells has a record of almost half a century, forty-eight years of service to his country.

I have no explicit information in regard to the financial condition of Mrs. Wells. My personal impression is such I have been led to believe she has been left in humble circumstances.

I should regret to see any distinction made against this officer, whose services have placed him in the front rank of the Navy.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think I am prompted in my opposition to this bill by a consideration of fairness equal to that which prompts the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. TAULBEE. In advocating this bill the gentleman said he would regret to see a discrimination made against this claim; he would regret to see justice denied this claimant. I know it has been the custom of Congress, where shown to the satisfaction of Congress widows of rear-admirals or of generals in the Army, corresponding with rear-admirals, were in destitute circumstances, that they were laboring under physical disabilities, to increase their pension above that of the law at an equal and fair rate. It is not the business of Congress to give pensions to widows on account of meritorious services of their husbands. That is not the policy of the Government. It is the policy of the Government to grant widows pensions because of the death of their husbands. It would be unfair to the widow of a rear-admiral to whom the law gives a pension of $30 a month to give another a pension of $50 a month, for the loss of a husband is as great to one woman as to another.

The object of our pension laws is to give to the widows of our soldiers a pension which is believed to be sufficient. My colleague brings a list of precedents, and the more we pass special cases the longer that list will be, until after a while the widow of a rear-admiral and of every officer of corresponding rank in the Army who can bring influence to bear, either social or political, on members of Congress to induce them to advocate special bills, will be given pensions at $50 a month, when those who have no such influence, and whom we might reasonably conclude were most destitute of means of support, are compelled by our laws to put up with pensions of $30 a month. I maintain that is a discrimination against widows who are in destitute circumstances, and many, no doubt, in absolute poverty.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not this almost the only widow of a rear-admiral who remains at $30 a month, and is it not a discrimination against her?

Mr. TAULBEE. I have not a list of the surviving widows of rear-admirals. I remember in the Forty-ninth Congress a report was submitted from the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the case of Mrs. Logan, which gave a list of rear-admirals of the Navy, and the number was considerable.

But I maintain, Mr. Chairman, if this is really the last one we can treat them all alike by general law as to come in here and consume the time of our Friday-night sessions by presentation of these enormous pension claims to the detriment of smaller claims of widows of private soldiers.

I know all over the country as well as in my district there are widows of private soldiers who, by reason of some technicality or inability to comply with some iron-clad rule of the Pension Office, are deprived of a pension of $12 a month. I do not think I will live long enough to forget an instance which occurred during my stay at home after the Forty-ninth Congress. I had occasion to visit the house of the widow of a Union soldier for whom I had been instrumental in procuring the passage of a bill giving her $12 a month. When I looked around me and beheld absolute poverty, the evidence of which was apparent on every hand, and witnessed the tears of that poor woman as she recited the distress she had suffered from the close of the war until relief came by the act passed by the Forty-ninth Congress, I was reminded of the injustice done to the great number of these loyal widows throughout the country, injustice resulting on many occasions by discrimination as in the bill before us.

I believe, if it be the sense of Congress that the widows of rear-admirals of this country are entitled to a pension of $50 a month, that it should be paid to them under some general law; and let the pension of no person in this country depend upon the pleas that may be brought to bear upon the committees of the House or Congress to secure such pensions. I am opposed to such special legislation.

Mr. NUTTING. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. NUTTING. Suppose you stop the passage of this bill, does it make the injustice any the less as to the others? Are you not taking out of the way one person? It does not relieve the rest any to stop this one. If you prevent the passage of this bill you do not relieve the distress of any person who is now an applicant for pension. Is not that so?

Mr. TAULBEE. I admit the gentleman's argument is, to some extent, plausible.

Mr. NUTTING. Not plausible. Is it not a fact?

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, no; I do not like to say that, because I want to be entirely parliamentary and courteous, but I do not believe it is. That is not my understanding of it, at all events. I believe that by the passage of these extravagant individual pension bills the consciences of members of the House are liable to be satisfied to the injustice of the poor and needy. I believe that whatever is done in this direction ought to be done where the relief is absolutely needed, and that we ought to begin at the bottom and take those who are in the greatest need first. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further discussion, the question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, at the end of the bill, the words "hereafter receive" and insert "now be receiving."

Mr. FINLEY. One word, Mr. Chairman. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I shall detain the committee but a moment.

I am proud that I am here [laughter], in the first place. I am proud that I represent a constituency that has no admiral, rear or otherwise, and I have got no interest in this bill. I am proud that this Government lives. I am proud that men on either side, as well as myself, are proud of the Government in which we all live. I am proud of the fact that we have the money to pay such pensions to the soldiers, their widows and orphans, as we may regard to be proper. I am proud, and I hope every other man on this floor is proud, that our laws have been so shaped and we are so shaping them now, that men who risk or sacrifice their lives for this country and the honor of its flag, which shall wave over one single union of States, and we hope also over a union of hearts and hands in the United States, will never find that Congress is disposed to be niggardly about it and close-fisted in extending charity, while doing only justice to the widows and orphans of those who have so richly earned their reward.

I trust the bill will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will ask that this bill and the preceding one be classed together, as I want a vote on them in the House.

Mr. FORD. What does the gentleman mean by classing them together?

The CHAIRMAN. The bills have been laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. I know; but I want to give notice so that the clerks may have them separated from the other bills, as a separate vote will be demanded upon them.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the wishes of a number of gentlemen, for whom I have a great respect, I withdraw any further objection I made to the unanimous consent for the consideration of bills out of their regular order.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask to pass the next bill on the Calendar before that order is made.

EMILY G. MILLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4534) for the relief of Emily G. Mills.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to have the name of Emily G. Mills, as widow of Oscar B. Mills, late a second assistant engineer in the United States Navy (retired), placed on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4534) for the relief of Emily G. Mills, beg leave to report as follows:

The bill proposes to pension Mrs. Emily G. Mills, as widow of Oscar B. Mills, late second assistant engineer, United States Navy (retired). The following is an abstract of the record of husband of claimant as furnished by the honorable Secretary of the Navy:

"Oscar B. Mills was appointed an acting third assistant engineer in the Navy October 31, 1862, and ordered to the Ladona.

"January 27, 1863, he was warranted as third assistant engineer in the regular Navy, to take rank from January 16, 1863; was then on the Ladona.

"July 19, 1864, was warranted as second assistant engineer, to take rank from May 28, 1864.

"June 17, 1865, detached from the Lehigh and placed on waiting orders.

"August 5, 1866, was ordered to the Yantic.

"August 18, 1866, commissioned as second assistant engineer from July 25, 1866.

"November 12, 1866, detached from the Yantic and placed on waiting orders.

"November 19, 1866, ordered to special duty at New York; December 19, 1867, detached and ordered to the Saco; December 9, 1868, detached and placed on waiting orders.

"May 28, 1869, ordered to the Dictator; September 10, 1869, detached and placed on sick leave.

"February 11, 1871, ordered to appear before the naval retiring board.

"November 22, 1871, again ordered to appear before the naval retiring board.

"June 13, 1872, ordered to the Tallapoosa; July 10, 1872, detached and placed on sick leave.

"October 11, 1872, ordered to appear before the naval retiring board.

"October 26, 1872, he was placed on the retired-list.

"He died at Tunkhannock, Pa., on the 10th of August, 1873.

"The following is a copy of the finding of the retiring board, before which he appeared in obedience to the Department's order of February 11, 1871:

"'First. That, in their judgment, Second Assistant Engineer O. B. Mills is at this time incapacitated for active service.

"'Second. That, in their judgment, the disability of Second Assistant O. B. Mills arose from an attack of malarious fever while he was serving on board the United States steam-ship Saco at Aspinwall, in the year 1868, and that the said disability originated from sickness in the line of duty.

"'The board respectfully recommend that Mr. Mills be not placed on the retired-list of the Navy at this time, but that he be allowed leave for six months to recover his health.'

"A copy of the finding of the retiring board before which Second Assistant Engineer Oscar B. Mills was examined in December, 1871:

"'The board * * * after mature deliberation upon the evidence adduced, find that Second Assistant Engineer Oscar B. Mills is not in any way incapacitated from performing the duties of his office.'

"The following is a copy of the finding of the retiring board before which Second Assistant Engineer Oscar B. Mills was examined in October, 1872:

"'The board * * * after mature deliberation find Second Assistant Engineer Oscar B. Mills laboring under general debility, the effect of intermittent fever acting upon an originally delicate constitution. We further find that he is incapacitated for active service, and that his sickness originated in the line of duty.'

"This finding was approved by the President of the United States October 25, 1872, and pursuant to which Second Assistant Oscar B. Mills was retired from active service."

The husband of claimant was killed accidentally August 10, 1873, leaving his widow and daughter, the latter now aged about seventeen years, in very narrow circumstances, as is satisfactorily shown before your committee by the affidavits of her near neighbors.

In view of this fact, and the long service of claimant's husband, your committee would recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I call up for present consideration House bill 2078, which with the report I send to the desk.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I must insist upon the regular order for one more bill at least.

EMILY GOODALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3682) to pension Emily Goodall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Goodall, widow of Robert S. Goodall, who was pensioned by act of Congress approved February 26, A. D. 1881.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

Emily Goodall is the widow of Robert S. Goodall, late first-class pilot United States steamer Champion, of the Mississippi squadron, who died of disease of lungs February 1, 1887.

Robert S. Goodall, entered the naval service of the United States at Louisville, Ky., on the 17th of August, 1863, as first-class pilot on the United States gunboat Champion No. 4, and was honorably discharged on the 17th day of May, 1864. He applied for pension on account of pleurisy and resulting disease of lungs, July 19, 1879, but his claim was rejected by the Pension Office because of a record made by Assistant Surgeon Vail, to the effect that Goodall was admitted to the sick list February 28, 1864, for "pain over stomach, liver, and right pleura, which originated from the excessive use of alcoholic stimulants."

On February 26, 1881, an act was passed placing the name of Goodall on the pension-roll, and in pursuance of said act he was allowed total pension for disease of lungs.

It appears from the evidence on file that Goodall received his appointment from Admiral Porter, upon the recommendation of Capt. Z. M. Sherley, of Louisville, Ky., who, because of his familiarity with the navigation of the Western waters, was requested to secure suitable men for this service.

For several years prior to his enlistment Goodall was in the employ of Captain Sherley, who testifies that at the time he (Goodall) entered the service of the United States he was a stout, active man, in good health and physical condition, and in full possession of his mental and physical powers. That he was a temperate man, otherwise he would not have employed him and intrusted such vital interests to him as pilot of the first-class steam-boats in the West. That during the time of his services as pilot in the United States service, and since his discharge from the service, affiant was well acquainted with the habits of Goodall, and knows that the disease under which he labored did not arise from the excessive use of alcoholic stimulants or from intemperance. The affidavit of Captain Sherley, above referred to, bears the following indorsement:

"I am personally acquainted with Captain Sherley, have been for a number of years, and would rely as implicitly upon his word as that of any person of my acquaintance.

"June 8, 1874.

"U. S. GRANT."

Dr. Henry Chenoweth, who had been Goodall's family physician for ten years, Dr. Lewis Rogers, and Dr. John Thurston, who had known him for years, all of whom are of the highest personal and professional standing, confirm Captain Sherley's statement, that prior to his enlistment Godall's "health was unimpaired, and that his habits were uniformly good and temperate."

Ensign Merwin Allen testifies:

"During Captain Goodall's term of service I was doing duty on the Champion as watch officer, and the greater portion of the time as executive officer. Captain G.'s ill-health and disability were occasioned in the line of his duty as first-class pilot. I further state I believe Assistant Surgeon Vail made the report of his (Goodall's) sickness through malice and ill-disposition toward Goodall, caused by some private difficulty between them, and that said Vail continued to be inimical to Goodall until the time of his (G.'s) departure for the vessel."

Pilot W. S. Henthorn swears:

"I was over two years on the Champion, and know something of the dangers and exposures that it was necessary to undergo while under way. We had to remain six hours within an iron-casemated pilot-house, without fire, with scarcely any protection from rain or cold. Captain Goodall was a very efficient pilot, and, until he took sick, was always ready for duty, and I firmly believe his ill-health and final disability was occasioned by exposure while in the line of duty as pilot in the United States Navy. I have seen the entry of Mr. Vail, and have reason to think it is wholly malicious, as I know that the surgeon and Captain Goodall were not on amicable terms. He (the surgeon) remarked to me the day Captain Goodall took his departure, 'Well, Henthorn, you have lost your partner.' I asked him if he thought the captain would not get able to return to the vessel. He laughed and remarked he would not be permitted to do so when his (Vail's) report met the eye of Admiral Porter."

Second Engineers C. A. Fisher and George Wadlee also testify in corroboration of above statements.

Your committee are clearly of opinion that the evidence in the case fully warranted the passage of a bill for the relief of said Robert S. Goodall, and he having died of the disease which Congress by its action recognized as chargeable to the naval service of the United States, no good reasons appearing why a different conclusion should be reached in this case, unless it be the adverse action of the Pension Bureau upon the widow's claim, recommend that the accompanying bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THERESA B. HOFFMAN.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry—why Senate bill 1665 was passed over? This is a bill in which I happen to have a peculiar interest.

The CHAIRMAN. It was an accidental omission. The Clerk will return to the bill now and report it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theresa B. Hoffman, widow of E. G. Hoffman, deceased, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month, to commence from the date of the death of the said E. G. Hoffman, August 16, 1886.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report, which is quite a lengthy one.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think it ought to be read or else an explanation given.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know anything of this bill, but it has passed the Senate and been recommended by the House Committee on Pensions, and I think that ought to be a sufficient voucher without reading the lengthy and elaborate report. I believe, and I say it with great respect, and with no desire to criticise the action of the committee, that many of these reports are unnecessarily voluminous. I have noticed in many cases these reports are perfect biographies of the men to whom they refer. It does seem to me that if they would just state the essential features necessary for giving the information to the House we would get along a great deal better.

Mr. CASWELL. This is a Senate bill. It has had the careful consideration of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The report is somewhat lengthy. I looked it over once and was entirely satisfied that it is a strong case; but I can not recall the circumstances sufficiently to state them at this time.

Mr. NUTTING. I think the gentleman from Kentucky has indicated his desire to dispense with the reading of the report.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no wish to have the report read if I can get an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CASWELL. As I have stated, I can not give the explanation at present.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read in part.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

Mr. CASWELL. I remember the circumstances now. The husband of the claimant was on duty in South Carolina, at Charleston. When his regiment was mustered out he was retained by the force of military discipline, and by order of his superior officer was placed on duty at that post; and one night when a fire occurred, he, acting, I think, as provost-marshal, was present and a falling building crushed his arm.

Mr. MORRILL. The only difficulty about the case is that the man was a sergeant at the time he received the wound. He afterwards became a captain; and this is to give the pension of a captain's widow. That is the recommendation of the Pension Office.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is satisfactory.

The further reading of the report was dispensed with.

In full it is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2873) granting a pension to Theresa B. Hoffman, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, have at this session made a report on a similar bill, which your committee beg leave to adopt as its own, as follows:

"The husband of the claimant was pensioned by special act, approved August 5, 1882. The report recommending the passage of the bill explains the military service rendered by him, and is as follows:

"That said Hoffman entered the United States military service in July, 1861, as sergeant of Company A, Fifth New York Volunteers. At the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia, June 27, 1862, he received a gunshot wound in his left arm, shattering the bone and necessitating a resection above the elbow, which left his arm practically useless. He was mustered out of service July 31, 1862.

"In November, 1862, after his wound had healed, he re-entered the service as first lieutenant Company D, One hundred and sixty-fifth New York Volunteers, and was subsequently promoted to the captaincy of Company F.

"At the close of the war his regiment was ordered to South Carolina, and in July, 1865, he was appointed chief of military police of the subdistrict of Charleston. On the 1st of September, 1865, his regiment was sent to Hart's Island to be mustered out of service, but General Burnett, the commanding officer at the post of Charleston, would not allow Hoffman to be retired or discharged with his regiment, but continued him on duty in Charleston as chief of military police. While in the performance of his duties, at a fire on Hayne street, October 18, 1865, he was severely injured by the walls of the burning building giving way and falling upon him, breaking his right thigh in two places and burning him badly. His right hand was so badly burned as to contract the sinews and leave the hand drawn up. His injuries confined him in bed for three months; his right leg is almost 2 inches shorter than the left, and his right hand is practically disabled. General Burnett, in an order bearing date October 21, 1865, appointing another chief of military police, states that Captain Hoffman was 'in the faithful discharge of his duties' when he received said injuries.

"In April, 1866, Captain Hoffman went to New York and obtained his discharge, which was antedated to September 1, 1865, so as to make it correspond with the date his regiment was mustered out of the service. He was in fact, however, not relieved from duty or discharged until after receiving the injuries aforesaid.

"In 1867 he applied for a pension, and was allowed $4 per month for the gunshot wound in the left arm, received at the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia, but for injuries received while acting as chief of military police no allowance was made. The War Department having ruled that Captain Hoffman's time of service ceased with the mustering out of his regiment, the Commissioner of Pensions held that he was not pensionable for injuries received after that date.

"This ruling may be technically correct, but under the special circumstances of this case your committee are of the opinion that Captain Hoffman should be relieved from its operation. He was denied a discharge when his regiment was mustered out (being on special detail duty at the time), and his commanding officer required him to continue in the performance of the special service to which he had previously been assigned. He did so, and was injured in the service and in the line of his duty. It would be unjust on the part of the Government, after having detained him, as already stated, in its service, to urge as a bar to his claim for pension that he was constructively discharged with his regiment before receiving his injuries.

"For the same reason that her husband's application to the Pension Office was disallowed the widow is unable to procure a pension from that source. In the case of the former there can be no doubt that special legislation was not only proper, but was the only way in which justice could be done. The widow is aged and in much need, and her case appeals as strongly to Congress as did that of her husband."

Your committee have carefully examined the evidence in the case and cheerfully concur in the opinion expressed in the foregoing report, and therefore respectfully return the accompanying bill and ask that Senate bill 1665 be substituted therefor, and that said substituted bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLOTTE T. CLARK.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 2078) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of Charlotte T. Clark, widow of Bela T. Clark, late captain Company D, Forty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at a monthly rating of $30, from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Strike out the words "at a monthly rating of $30 from and after the passage of this act," and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read in part.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to that, if an explanation is given.

Mr. PAYSON. I will state that I knew this man personally for twelve or fifteen years before his death. Commencing my statement where the reading clerk has just ended, I will state that during the remaining ten years of his life he was most of the time bedridden and had to be lifted on a sheet that the bed might be made.

He was so poor that he could not have medical attendance for the last two or three years, and during that time it was a constant struggle between life and death as to which would win.

The only difficulty at the Pension Office was, that while this condition of things existed as to this soldier, when he was lifted out of bed, a window was open, and he took cold and the doctor said his death was caused by acute pneumonia; and the medical gentlemen connected with the Pension Bureau could not understand from their books that there could be any connection between acute pneumonia and chronic diarrhea.

The evidence in the Pension Officie is clear that the man was almost dead when this attack came upon him. That is the substance of the case. His widow is now in a destitute condition, and if there was ever a meritorious case I think this is one.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is satisfactory.

The further reading of the report was dispensed with. In full it is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2078) for the relief of Charlotte T. Clark, submit the following report:

The soldier, Bela T. Clark, enlisted August 10, 1861, and was discharged July 14, 1862, and died January 10, 1873, and he held the rank of captain at that time. He drew a pension in his life-time, which was allowed him on the ground of diarrhea.

B. F. Gray, second lieutenant of the company, testifies to the origin of diarrhea; that at the time the soldier was furloughed, May, 1862, he was so weak and emaciated as to be perfectly helpless on account of said disease; that he had been with the soldier ever since 1864, and that he had never been free from chronic diarrhea, and that just before his death he suffered very much from this disease, so as to require constant medical treatment.

Dr. Keyser, who was examining surgeon, two months before soldier's death testified that he was the family physician of the soldier ever since the summer of 1860, and when he saw the soldier in 1862 he was suffering from chronic diarrhea; that he treated him at that time, and that the disease continued almost uninterrupted up to 1863; that it never has been cured, and that he believes it never will be, and that the soldier's constitution is broken down by the disease, and that the suffering of the soldier is from the effects of diarrhea.

In 1878 B. F. Clark testified that he knew of his own personal knowledge that the soldier was suffering with the disease since the war, and that he was constantly wearing out under the disease, and that in 1872 he was very feeble and confined much of the time to his room. These facts are fully sustained by other witnesses. The witness Clark further testified that the soldier contracted a cold, which, in his feeble condition, settled upon his lungs and throat, and carried him off. This witness says that if the soldier had not been rendered so feeble by diarrhea the cold would not prove serious at all.

Worcester testifies that the soldier, from the disease of camp diarrhea, became so emaciated that he was almost a walking skeleton, his constitution entirely undermined and all vital force of resistance to disease gone, and that diarrhea was at least the remote cause of his death.

Dr. Ellis testifies that in 1868 he knew the soldier, and that he had chronic diarrhea, which rendered him unfit for any labor; that to the date of the death of the soldier there was a gradual decline in his physical powers from continual exhausting process of chronic diarrhea, and from this cause his death was assured at no distant period, and that the cause of the death of the soldier, in the opinion of Dr. Ellis, was chronic diarrhea, although he had pneumonia at the time, which was, perhaps, the immediate cause.

Dr. Keyser testifies that there was a total physical disability from chronic diarrhea, which destroyed the forces of resistance of the vital powers, and that it is his opinion that the soldier could recover from his last sickness had it not been for the inroads of chronic diarrhea, and that he had the chronic diarrhea since he came out of the service. That from early in August, 1872, to the date of the death the soldier had diarrhea continuously, and that without doubt the chronic diarrhea was the remote cause of his death, and that his life was wholly exhausted at the time of the attack of pneumonia.

And the committee being of opinion that the death of the soldier was from chronic diarrhea—that is, that he would not have died of pneumonia if his constitution had not been paralyzed by chronic diarrhea—and that he received a pension of $20 per month in his life time for diarrhea, we therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "volunteer," in the sixth line, and to insert in lieu thereof "subject to the limitation of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID JOHNSON.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5363) granting a pension to David Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of David Johnson, of Virginia, Ill., late a member of Company C, First North Carolina Regiment of Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read in part.

On motion of Mr. NUTTING, by unanimous consent, the further reading of the report was dispensed with.

In full it is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5363) granting a pension to David Johnson, submit the following report:

The said David Johnson enlisted in Company C, First North Carolina Infantry, on the 18th day of March, 1863, and was mustered out with his company June 27, 1865. At the time of enlistment this soldier was fifty-seven years old and had been engaged for several years in farming. He states that he was perfectly sound and able to do as much work when he enlisted as any man. This statement is affirmed by affiants Charles W. Swain and J. W. Clifton, who knew him for a long time prior to 1857. They say that when he enlisted they "considered him physically sound in every respect, having never heard him complain of any disease. He was always able to do as much manual labor as any man."

Sometime during the summer of 1863 the said Johnson contracted fever from exposure while on duty, and lay for six weeks in the hospital at Little Washington, N. C., under the treatment of the regimental surgeon, Dr. Babbet, who died before application was made. This case was rejected because there was no hospital record of it, and no evidence showing disability from the time of discharge until 1868.

The report of the Adjutant-General's Office states that there is no record of disability on file; but adds, "regimental hospital records are not on file." This report does not state that the hospital records do not show disease of soldier, but the absence of the entire record. Two comrades, Z. P. Alexander and Solomon Dunbar, belonging to the same company, swear to the sickness. Alexander says:

"I saw him when he was sent to the hospital at Washington and several times afterwards, and know he staid in the hospital from six to eight weeks, and was never able after he left to do anything but light duty."

Dunbar affirms this, and adds that he was disabled when he was discharged.

Immediately upon the close of the war Johnson moved into the hills of McKean County, Pennsylvania, and worked in the woods. He had but one neighbor within 3 miles of him—Charles Miller, whose family consisted of himself, wife, and son. Both Miller and his wife died before application was made, and the son moved West and can not be found. During this period Johnson had no physicians to treat him. He was living so far away that he could not summon a doctor without great trouble, and his sick spells came on suddenly in the nature of nervous prostration. After recovering consciousness from these spells, although remaining weak for days, he suffered no pain and no medical treatment was called for.

In 1868 Johnson moved to Cass County, Illinois, since which time, by abundance of evidence, it is shown that the old man has been nearly totally disabled from work; that while he has been at all times afflicted with troubles in his head and back, he has been subject to spells of prostration, when he would be entirely helpless. These spells have grown more frequent during the past years.

Dr. Smith, secretary of board of medical surgeons in Cass County, in a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, says: "He is attacked with paroxysms of shaking palsy, which are very bad. Will pass into a stupor which will last sometimes nearly two days," and that he is strictly honest, and his statement can be relied on implicitly.

This old soldier was a well-to-do farmer when he enlisted, and now at the age of eighty-two earns what little he can by sawing wood.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ISAAC DILLEY.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7171) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Isaac Dilley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Isaac Dilley, late of Company H, One hundred and thirtieth Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7171) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Isaac Dilley, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Claimant served as private in Company H, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, from February 9, 1864, to December 2, 1865, when mustered out with his command. He was allowed a pension January 17, 1873, at $8 per month, for dislocation and fracture of left elbow, incurred at Nashville, Tenn., April 5, 1864. This rate was increased at different times, until May 21, 1885, he was allowed $24 per month. Subject to this adjudication information was obtained by the Pension Bureau tending to show that the injury was received prior to enlistment, whereupon the case was specially examined. Much testimony has been taken during the examination, and the purport of the same may briefly be stated in the language of the reviewer who acted upon the case prior to the dropping of the pensioner's name from the rolls. He says:

"There is no doubt—in fact claimant admits—he incurred an injury to his left elbow about 1855, which left said elbow 'slightly crooked.' He alleges that he was an able-bodied man up to enlistment, with the exception of the slight crookedness of left elbow. The only question to ascertain is, did claimant receive a second injury to his left elbow during service and in line of duty which aggravated the injury incurred prior to enlistment?

"The claimant, who is of good character, a truthful, industrious man, makes a clear statement in respect to the incurrence of injury in service and in line of duty. He is supported in his statements by comrades and by Capt. Joseph C. Gresson, late of Company H, One hundred and thirtieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, who says: 'He [claimant] was one among the best in the company and never shrank from duty. * * * There was nothing in his appearance to indicate that there was anything the matter with his left arm either in drill or other duty until he went out on that detail [meaning the detail on which claimant alleges the injury was incurred], and he never had a sound arm afterward while I knew him in the service.'

"The evidence, in my opinion, establishes that claimant's left elbow was injured a second time, and said second injury was incurred in service. * * * The case of Daniel Lamon, Company I, Fifty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, application 403304, is believed to be exactly parallel to the one now under consideration. The honorable Commissioner, in ruling 181, says 'that his present condition is due to a pre-existing disability and its aggravation by military service and in line of duty.' From the above-cited reasons I am of opinion the claim is not a fraud, and claimant's name should not be dropped from the pension-roll."

The re-reviewer, however, took a different view of the case, prejudiced apparently because of the claimant's failure in the first instance to make known his first injury, and his judgment prevailed; the name was dropped from the rolls, and this action sustained by the Secretary of the Interior November 7, 1887. After a careful examination of all the evidence in the case, your committee concur in the opinion of the reviewer above quoted for the reasons therein set forth, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES M. BERRY.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, called up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 3490) granting a pension to James M. Berry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Berry, father of John H. Berry, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Infantry, and Robert L. Berry, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-third Regiment of Illinois Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read in part.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, if the only question in this case is the question of dependence, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. It seems to be very clear on that point.

The report was ordered to be printed in full in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 3490, submit the following report:

The record in this case shows that John H. Berry and Robert L. Berry, sons of James M. Berry, enlisted in the Illinois Infantry as privates, and while in the service one of them was drowned and the other died of disease contracted in the service. After their death and after the close of the war their mother, the wife of said James M. Berry, made application to the Pension Office for a pension, but said application was rejected for the reason that the testimony did not sufficiently show that the mother was depending on the soldiers for her support at the time of their enlistment. The testimony of Dr. Hobson, now on file with the committee, shows that the said James M. Berry is afflicted, and has been so afflicted for about twelve years; that he has not been able to take care of himself, and most of the time he has had to have constant personal attention.

The testimony of Abner Moore and John E. Knight further shows that the said James M. Berry for the last twelve years has been totally disabled physically, and has been unable to dress himself or help himself on account of paralysis, and that he has no means of support whatever, and that if the said Robert L. Berry and John H. Berry were now living the said James M. Berry would be depending on them for his support. The record further shows that the mother of the said soldiers departed this life about four years ago. And from the evidence aforesaid it appears now that the said James M. Berry would be depending on the said soldiers for a living if they were now living, and that he is now about seventy-nine years of age, and in the course of nature can not live long, and is poor and needy.

The committee therefore recommend that this bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CYNTHIA J. LEROY.

Mr. CANNON, by unanimous consent, called up the bill (H. R. 7891) for the relief of Cynthia J. Leroy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name Cynthia J. Leroy, the invalid daughter of Abraham Leroy, late a private of Company B, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and pay said daughter a pension of $13 per month for and during her natural life.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I can state in a word the substance of the report in this case. This woman's father was a private in the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, was pensioned for kidney trouble, and drew a pension until his death, which resulted from that trouble. About a year ago his widow applied for a pension, but before it could be granted she died. This woman, the youngest child, is over forty years of age. She is paralyzed in the lower part of her body, so that she is entirely helpless, permanently paralyzed, and there is nothing between her and the poor-house except the justice or the bounty of the Government.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that $18 a month is fixed as the rate of the pension in this case?

Mr. CANNON. For the reason that on consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, he seemed to think that was quite as small a pension as was usual in such cases, and said that it ought to be $18 at least, if it was anything. This is all this woman will have to live upon, and, as I have said, she is absolutely helpless. It is in the line of a bill of the same kind, and, indeed, of several bills that have been passed heretofore.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask the gentleman if he does not think that this is a discrimination in favor of a remote relative of the deceased soldier?

Mr. CANNON. She happens to be his daughter.

Mr. TAULBEE. But she is not entitled to a pension under the general law.

Mr. CANNON. Clearly not. Otherwise I would not ask to have this bill passed.

Mr. TAULBEE. And in addition to that, this bill proposes to put her in the case of a widow, a degree of relationship recognized by the general pension law, and to give her a pension 50 per cent. above that which the general law gives to the widow.

Mr. CANNON. But she is absolutely helpless.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not see any good reason why we should give to a daughter a pension on account of her disability, and not be willing to rate the widows of soldiers according to their disabilities.

Mr. FELTON. We are willing to do that always.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask my friend [Mr. TAULBEE] if he thinks that $200 is more than enough for an absolutely helpless woman who has nothing else to depend on.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think $200 would be more than sufficient to give a support, a bare support, to an afflicted woman; but the gentleman certainly knows that that is not a good argument in favor of a pension, unless it is made applicable to those relatives who are recognized by the general law as being entitled to pension by reason of the death of the soldier. I think, Mr. Chairman, that when we go to the extent of pensioning a daughter above the age of sixteen years, she certainly ought to be content to receive the same rate of pension that the widows of soldiers are entitled to under the general law, many of whom are, as the gentleman will doubtless admit, as badly afflicted as this lady.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if there are any of them who are paralyzed, unable to work, absolutely helpless, and without means of support, so that they must go to the poor-house unless we give them relief, I am in favor of allowing them at least $18 per month.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have got the gentleman committed on that question, and I have no further objection to his bill. [Laughter.]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WIDOW OF EMANUEL R. HAWN.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6974) for the relief of —— Hawn, widow of Emanuel R. Hawn, late surgeon of the Forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, deceased.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of —— Hawn, widow of Emanuel R. Hawn, late surgeon of the Forty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

The Adjutant-General reports that Emanuel R. Hawn was mustered into the service June 12, 1861, as second lieutenant Company C, Seventeenth Indiana Volunteers, as first lieutenant to date from February 1, 1862, and as captain to date from May 1, 1862. His resignation was tendered and accepted on account of "excessive corpulency, which unfits him for service on foot," September 29, 1862.

He was mustered in as assistant surgeon First Indiana Heavy Artillery, October 21, 1862, and was mustered out April 4, 1864, by reason of promotion, and was mustered in as surgeon Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, to date April 4, 1864, and was mustered out November 29, 1864. He was mustered in as surgeon One hundred and forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers March 9, 1865, to serve one year, and was mustered out with field and staff August 5, 1865.

The claimant alleges that while in the line of duty as the surgeon of the Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, the soldier, on or about the 15th day of May, 1864, at or near Red River, Louisiana, received the injury, or hernia of the abdomen, by being thrown from his horse. His horse became frightened, unmanageable, and ran away with him, the girth of the saddle breaking, causing him to be thrown violently to the ground, thereby causing and producing the hernia, which caused his death August 14, 1883. Col. James Keigwin, commanding the Forty-ninth Indiana at the time, testifies from personal knowledge to the incursion of the hernia as client alleges, his command at the time serving under General Banks; that the surgeon always complained of the injury during the remainder of his service in the Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers. George W.

Riddle, adjutant Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, testifies identically with the colonel.

Dr. John M. Craig testifies he was well acquainted with Surgeon Hawn from August, 1865, the date of his muster-out, to 1881, and knows he was a great sufferer on account of rupture of the abdomen. His means of knowing such facts is that he was a partner of Surgeon Hawn from 1866 to 1876.

Dr. J. R. Bigelow, late United States examining surgeon for pensions (now deceased), filed July 6, 1885, states as follows:

"My attention was called by Emanuel R. Hawn, late surgeon Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, to a large umbilical reducible hernia, with which he was suffering, in October, 1865. I reduced the hernia and applied a truss, which, however, failed to retain the bowel. From October, 1865, to within a period of a month before his death, I had treated him frequently for strangulation with morphia, chloroform, and taxis."

Dr. E. S. Elder testifies as follows:

"I was the attending physician of the soldier during his last illness, and had previously known him for five years. He was suffering from an immense umbilical hernia, which occasionally became strangulated, and was constantly irritated by the excoriation of the integuments covering the hernia. The hernia was the source of constant pain, and in July, 1883, became inflamed and irritated to such an extent as to confine the patient to his bed. He medicated himself for a few days, and becoming worse, I was sent for and found him suffering severely. He had been using sulphate of morphia largely, he informed me. I attended for several days. On the 13th day of August, 1883, he became worse and suffered severely. On August 14, 1883, he suffered very much, and I was called in and administered a hypodermic injection of sulphate of morphia. In a few hours I was recalled and found him narcotized. Was informed that after my departure he took a large dose of morphia and soon became in the condition I found him. He died from the effects of the narcotic (morphia) in twelve hours from the time of my first visit."

The claim was rejected under ruling 112, which is as follows:

"Where soldier died from an overdose of opium self-administered, held, that whether the fatal dose was taken by mistake or during temporary insanity, the claim can not be admitted, upon the theory that, as opium had been prescribed for the soldier, he might easily contract the habit of taking it; that his death was not due to service, and his claim should be rejected."

Since the claim was rejected client has filed an additional affidavit from Dr. Elder, which is as follows:

"The soldier came under my care and treatment about July 14, 1883. He was suffering from the effects of an enormously large umbilical hernia, and he died August 14, 1883, from its effects. In my former statement I mentioned the fact that the immediate cause of his death was from the effects of an overdose of morphia. I desire to say that while he died from the effects of the morphia, yet his death was expected from the effects of the hernia, and would have taken place in the course of a very short time. The hernia was ulcerated and inflamed and would have weighed 20 or 25 pounds, and was so large that no truss could be adjusted to retain it. He used morphine to relieve his sufferings and took an overdose. I think that his death was fairly attributable to the effects of the hernia as the prime cause of his death. I had informed his family that his death would occur very soon from the debilitated condition the hernia had produced."

Hon. John C. Black, Commissioner of Pensions, in submitting the papers to the Secretary of the Interior, says:

"SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith the papers in the pension claim above indicated for transmittal through your office to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, that the attention of Congress may be invited to the facts in the case for such action in the premises, under the provisions of joint resolution approved May 29, 1830, as that honorable body may deem just and proper.

"It appears from the testimony filed in this case that the husband of the claimant, while in the service, was thrown from his horse and severely ruptured in the abdomen.

"The rupture appears to have been one of unusual size and severity, causing him great trouble and suffering at different times on account of it becoming strangulated and inflamed.

"During the last days of his life the rupture became unusually troublesome and painful, and it was apparent that it would cause his death at an early date.

"For his relief the attending physician administered opium, and during the absence of the physician the patient took an additional dose of opium, and died from the effect of the narcotic August 14, 1883.

"Not having died from the effect of the rupture received in the service, but from an overdose of opium, self-administered, the claim of the widow was rejected on that ground.

"There appears to have been no suicidal intent upon the part of the deceased, the narcotic having been resorted to merely to obtain relief from his intense suffering, and his condition was such that his life must have been soon terminated by the rupture. I therefore recommend this case for the action of Congress.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

"The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR."

The committee are unanimously of the opinion that the injuries which finally resulted in death were contracted in the Army while in line of duty, and that the bill ought to pass with the following amendment:

In line 4, before the word "Hawn," insert "Mary E.," and when so amended we recommend that the bill do pass. We also recommend that the bill be amended accordingly.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, before the word "Hawn," insert "Mary E."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary E. Hawn, widow of Emanuel R. Hawn, late surgeon of the Forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, deceased."

The Clerk was proceeding to read the report, as already given, when

Mr. PERKINS said: This report seems to be lengthy. I ask unanimous consent that its further reading be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD. The case seems to be a good one.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the reading of the report be dispensed with, let there be a brief explanation.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. Emanuel R. Hawn, while in the military service during the war, fell from his horse on account of excessive corpulency, and was very badly ruptured. He lived until 1883. The evidence in support of the claim is very strong. The physician who attended him from July 14, 1883, until August 14, 1883, the date of his death, testifies that this man was in a very serious condition, entirely on account of this hernia; that in order to relieve the pain of the patient he administered from day to day doses of morphia. In the absence of the physician the patient took, without medical advice, an excessive dose of morphia, which threw him into a stupor, so that when the physician was again called in he found him in a condition from which he died. The immediate cause of death was the overdose of morphia, but in the opinion of the physician, if that had not been taken, the man, on account of hernia, could not have lived beyond a very few days. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendments, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALBERT NEVIN.

Mr. MOFFITT. I ask consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3870) granting a pension to Albert Nevin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Albert Nevin, late a private in Company K, Ninety-second New York Volunteers, upon the pension-roll at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the $25 per month heretofore allowed him, the said increase of pension to commence from the passage of this act, subject to the limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out "fifty," and insert "forty-five," so as to make the rate of pension $45 per month.

Mr. MORRILL (after the reading of the report had begun). This case appears to be one of total helplessness. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. TAULBEE. And that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the reading of the report will be dispensed with, and it will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

Albert Nevin enlisted in the Ninety-second Regiment New York Volunteers September 22, 1862, for three years. At the battle of Kinston, N. C., December 14, 1862, he received, according to his certificate of discharge, date of September 1, 1863, a gunshot wound "carrying away the lower jaw at a point corresponding to the anterior molar of either side. Articulation very imperfect and mastication impossible."

The certificate of the examining surgeon, of the date of September 6, 1863, describes him as follows:

"Wounded at Kinston, N. C., December 14, 1862. The lower jaw on either side, as far back as the angle, has been removed, resulting in frightful deformity. Loss of power of articulation, mastication, and deglutition."

In November, 1863, he was granted a pension of $8 per month.

Congress, in July, 1886, granted him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

He now asks that it be increased to the sum of $50 per month.

The act of Congress having fixed his rate of pension at a definite sum, the Pension Bureau has no power to change the same. His only relief is by another special act.

The evidence filed with the committee shows him to be badly suffering from indigestion occasioned by his inability to masticate his food, resulting in such a debilitated condition of his system as to be wholly unable to perform manual labor; that he is so poor that he is unable to provide himself with suitable food.

The committee think that this soldier, from the awful nature of his wound and the necessary consequences thereof, and his extreme poverty, should receive the relief provided in this bill, and would therefore recommend the passage thereof, with an amendment striking out the word "fifty," in the sixth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "forty-five."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS J. PARKER.

Mr. FORD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5176) granting a pension to Thomas J. Parker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas J. Parker, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment Michigan Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. MORRILL (when the report had been partially read). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this report be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) is as follows:

Parker served during the war of the rebellion in Company A, Fourth Regiment Michigan Cavalry. He applied for a pension on account of asthma contracted by exposure in the service, which application was rejected by the Pension Department on the ground that the asthma existed prior to his enlistment.

From testimony filed and submitted to the committee subsequent to the rejection of the claim, your committee are of the opinion that prior to his enlistment Parker was an able-bodied man, engaged in the occupation of blacksmithing.

H. H. Williams testifies that he has been acquainted with Parker since 1858, and that "he was a strong, healthy, able-bodied man, free from any constitutional disease or ailment," and that he "never knew of his being troubled with asthma or any other trouble with his throat or lungs."

Charles Carter submits an affidavit in which he states substantially the same as the former affiant.

William Partridge testifies that he has known Parker since 1850, and that prior to his enlistment "he was absolutely free from asthma."

James B. Streeter testifies that he has been acquainted with Parker since 1850, and that before he went to the war he was entirely free from asthma, and "a sound and healthy man."

James Forbes testifies that he worked with Parker as a blacksmith from 1859 for about two years, and that Parker was "as sound as a nut, and was free from asthma, and as tough as a bear."

John Southwell and W. A. Bliss, who knew Parker intimately before he enlisted, also testify to Parker's sound physical condition prior to his enlistment.

All of the above witnesses reside at Allegan, Mich., where Parker resided before the war, and where he now resides, and appear to be good citizens of excellent reputation. Parker is now old, destitute, and broken down in health.

In view of the above the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RICHARDSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the special order, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4672) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Wyman and the bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells, be laid aside until the other bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

CHARLOTTE BROAD.

The bill (H. R. 816) granting a pension to Charlotte Broad, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, was taken up, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer a further amendment to this bill by adding the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ISAIAH G. MAYO.

The bill (H. R. 824) granting a pension to Isaiah G. Mayo was taken up.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill should have been amended in Committee of the Whole. I ask that it be now amended in accordance with the report of the committee, by striking out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and adding after the word "service," in the last line, the words "the rating to be the same as allowed for similar disability to an enlisted man in the United States military service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EMILY M. WYMAN AND MARY S. WELLS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4672) granting a pension to Emily H. Wyman and the bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells be laid aside informally, not to lose their places on the Calendar. I suggest that the little time remaining of this evening session be devoted to the recognition of such members as are on the list, for motions to discharge the Committee of the Whole, and to pass some of these pension bills to which there is no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the two bills I have named be laid aside informally, not to lose their places on the Calendar.

Mr. BOUTELLE. They are now off the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, having been considered by that committee and reported to the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not understand that such action takes them off the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it takes them off the Private Calendar and they would now be upon the Calendar of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Let the previous question be ordered upon them.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to the previous question being ordered.

The bills were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed they were accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PERKINS. By unanimous consent, let the previous question be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DINGLEY. When will the bills come up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion if the previous question is ordered on the passage of the bills, the vote will come up to-morrow. That has been the practice.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it the purpose to insist on a vote in the House?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, that is what I want. I want a vote on both bills.

THERESA B. HOFFMAN.

A bill (S. 2873) granting a pension to Theresa B. Hoffman, reported favorably, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRILL (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 17, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has caused to be prepared an amendment to the Journal of the proceedings of the day before yesterday in relation to the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], which the Clerk will now read. This has relation to the proceedings which took place immediately after the call of the roll, as the House will remember, on the report of the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the conclusion of the second call of the roll, and before the result was announced, Mr. BLISS asked leave to vote, and stated that he was in the Hall of the House when his name was called but failed to hear it; whereupon Mr. TAULBEE made the point of order that under the rule of the House no member had the right to vote after the completion of the second call of the roll.

The Speaker ruled that notwithstanding the express language of clause 1 of Rule XV, which was adopted during the Forty-sixth Congress, it has been the uniform practice of the House to permit a member to vote when he stated he was within the Hall when his name was called but had failed to hear it; and therefore the point of order was overruled, and Mr. BLISS was permitted to vote.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this amendment of the Journal will be inserted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PENITENTIARY, BOISÉ CITY, IDAHO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting an estimate of the plan of the proposed enlargement of the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, Idaho; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence from Saturday until Tuesday, on account of the death of a relative.

PENSACOLA HARBOR, FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report of the survey of the outer and inner bars of Pensacola Harbor, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

CLERICAL FORCE, ORDNANCE AND COMMISSARY DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting letters from the Chief of Ordnance and the Commissary-General, in reference to the appropriations for clerical force in their offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of findings of fact in the following cases against the United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims, namely:

The case of J. Q. Ward, administrator; and

The case of James S. Frizzell.

FEDERAL COURTS, MISSOURI.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8044) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri, at the city of Hannibal, shall begin and be held on the fourth Monday of May and the first Monday of December of each year. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That all process issued from the clerk's office of said courts, and all recognizances taken therein, shall be taken and considered as returnable to the term or terms hereby established in lieu of the term or terms existing at the time such process was issued or such recognizances were taken.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire of my colleague if this interferes with the holding of the terms of court at other points in Missouri?

Mr. HATCH. It does not. It is to prevent a conflict. I have a letter from Judge Thayer, in which he states that the terms of court as now fixed by law, the spring and fall terms at Hannibal, conflict with his St. Louis term.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

T. J. EDWARDS, ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 518) for the relief of T. J. Edwards, administrator of David Edwards, deceased, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. J. Edwards, as administrator of the estate of David Edwards, deceased, late of Jackson County, Ohio, the sum of $225, for the balance due the said David Edwards, deceased, for property taken by the United States Army in 1862, as appears in his claim filed in 1879, in the Quartermaster-General's Office, No. 201,855, and referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for settlement, No. 59,148.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amount covered by the bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Let the report be read.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I will state that the sum covered by this bill is quite small, only $225.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not insist, then, upon the reading of the report.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES L. HENDERSON.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, when the House took a recess on yesterday evening I had obtained unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which was read, but further action was cut off by some dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was cut off by the arrival of the hour fixed for the recess. The bill was read on yesterday evening and unanimous consent given for its consideration. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of James L. Henderson on the roll of Company B, Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteers, as having been mustered into said company as a private of date ——, that being the date of his enlistment in said company.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] had demanded the reading of the report, and pending that the hour expired. The Clerk will now read the report.

The report (by Mr. GEAR) was read, as follows:

The records of the War Department show that the said Henderson was never mustered into the service of the United States, but the records of No. 4 General Hospital, at Paducah, Ky., show that James L. Henderson, a private in Company B, Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteers, was admitted to that hospital February 18, 1864, and was treated for typhoid pneumonia, and died February 19 or 20 of typhoid-malarial fever.

W. A. Walston, guardian of Henderson's minor children, testifies that "Henderson enlisted in Company B, Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteers, December 30, 1863, and died at Paducah February 28, 1864, of small-pox, before his company was mustered in." John E. Williams, late captain of Company B, Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteers, testifies that he—

"Personally remembers James L. Henderson, who was a soldier in said company; that Henderson enlisted December 30, 1863, at Paducah, Ky., for three years, and died at Paducah, Ky., February 28, 1864, of small-pox, which disease he contracted in the line of duty, and was never mustered in, as, when company was mustered in, March 17, 1864, said soldier was dead. That, further, his officers then had the mistaken idea that those of company who were dead when said muster-in took place should be dropped from the rolls, and this was done in Henderson's case, and his name is not, therefore, found on rolls of the Army."

The records of the War Department show that Company B, Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteers, was mustered into the military service of the United States March 17, 1864.

The evidence in this case clearly shows that the said James L. Henderson did enlist in good faith for three years; that he died of disease contracted in the line of duty; and that he died before the company of which he was a member was mustered into the military service of the United States; that owing to a lack of knowledge on the part of his company officers his name was not borne on the rolls at the time of the muster of his company.

In view of the facts in this case your committee are of the opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. When this bill was introduced I did not know the date of enlistment, hence there was a blank left in the bill. This was found afterwards in committee to be December 30, 1863, which date I ask to have fixed in the bill as an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Union Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7597) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of a site for a public building for the post-office, court-house, and other public offices in San Francisco, Cal.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think I must object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. MORROW. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection until I have an opportunity to explain why the bill is brought forward at this time. By the act of 1887 Congress provided for the appointment of a commission and authorized that commission to make the selection of a lot. The commission negotiated for a purchase and found that the sum of $350,000 provided in the original act was insufficient. The commission reported this fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury in two executive documents which I hold in my hand has indicated to Congress the fact that this sum of $350,000 is too small.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will object to the consideration of the bill until I can look into it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. After the next recognition I will have to call for the regular order.

MORGAN RAWLS.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 92) for the relief of Morgan Rawls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $800 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Morgan Rawls, of the State of Georgia, for a dwelling-house taken from the village of Guyton, Ga., in the latter part of the year 1865, by order of the United States officer in command at Savannah, Ga., through mistake for a Confederate building.

The report (by Mr. SHAW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 92) for the relief of Morgan Rawls, respectfully report back the same, and recommend that it do pass.

The following report from the Committee on Claims in the Forty-seventh and adopted by the Committee on Claims in the Forty-ninth Congress is made part hereof, to which reference is made for the facts:

[House Report No. 104, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2136) for the relief of Morgan Rawls, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

During the late war a number of buildings were erected by the Confederate authorities, for hospitals and quartermaster and commissary stores, at the village of Guyton, State of Georgia. Standing between and near these buildings was a small unoccupied dwelling-house belonging to Morgan Rawls, of the value of $800, not estimating the ground on which it stood. In the fall of 1865, during the absence of said Rawls, while in attendance upon the constitutional convention of said State and as a member of said convention, and after he had taken the oath known as the "amnesty oath," a detail of United States soldiers was sent to Guyton, by the United States military authorities, from Savannah, with instructions to take down and remove said Confederate buildings to Savannah, the materials to be used in the construction of school-houses for freedmen. In executing said instructions said soldiers destroyed, by mistake, said house belonging to Rawls. Said Rawls endeavored to obtain from the military authorities at Savannah compensation for his loss, but was never paid. A bill similar to this, for his relief, was introduced in the Forty-third Congress, and also in the Forty-fourth Congress, but no report was made in either Congress upon the bill.

The committee report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NORWOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 932) for the relief of the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, instructed to issue a duplicate 4 per cent. registered bond for the sum of $10,000 to the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and cause the same to be registered on the books of the Treasury in the name of the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in lieu of bond numbered 10307, for $10,000, act of July 14, 1870, consols of 1907, inscribed in the name of the Dutchess County Mutual Insurance Company, and assigned in blank, and lost or destroyed about the 24th day of July, 1880, upon the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie complying with the following conditions: That it file with the Secretary of the Treasury a consent by the Dutchess County Mutual Insurance Company to the cancellation of the entry on the books of the Treasury showing it to be the owner of said lost bond 10307, and to the issuing of said duplicate bond and to the payment of interest thereon hereafter to the Merchants' National Bank, which consent shall be in writing, executed and duly acknowledged by the officers of the said insurance company and approved of by the Secretary of the Treasury. That it also execute and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the penalty of $20,000, conditioned to save harmless and indemnify the United States from loss or liability on account of said original bond or the interest accruing thereon, and shall renew said bond from time to time as the Secretary of the Treasury or his successors may require, and shall deposit as collateral security to said indemnity bond with the Secretary of the Treasury said duplicate bond, to be held at all times by said Secretary until the liability of the United States upon said original bond shall be extinguished.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. KETCHAM. The bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is approved also by the Treasury Department. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], who reported the bill, to make the necessary explanation.

Mr. BACON. If any explanation is necessary, I will be glad to afford it. The Dutchess County Mutual Insurance Company, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was the owner of this bond. For the purpose of cashing it the insurance company signed a transfer in blank and took it to the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie. The amount was credited to the insurance company on the books of the bank. The bond was then put in an envelope and addressed by the cashier of that bank to the correspondent in New York of the Merchants' National Bank, and by him delivered to the teller of the bank to be mailed at the Poughkeepsie post-office.

Somewhere between the bank and the post-office the bond was lost and has never been seen since. The interest has been paid regularly to the Dutchess County Insurance Company and by that company paid over to the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie.

The bank applies now for the issue of a duplicate bond. It is obvious that the original bond, if in existence, might be presented as a valid claim against the Treasury of the United States. To protect the Government against that, the bill provides, first, that the consent of the Dutchess County Mutual Insurance Company to the cancellation of the entry on the books of the Treasury showing it to be the owner of the lost bond shall be filed in due form; and, second, that the Government shall be protected against any possible claim for interest or principal paid to the bank by a bond in the penalty of $20,000, and by the deposit as collateral of the duplicate bond with the Secretary of the Treasury. This bill simply settles the question between the two corporations.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is all I want to hear.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that instead of the regular call of committees for reports being proceeded with, any gentleman desiring to submit reports may do so. I think that will save some time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the formal regular call of committees for reports be dispensed with, but that gentlemen who desire to make reports may do so. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FOG-SIGNAL AT MANISTEE.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8591) for the establishment of a steam fog-signal at Manistee light-station, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. 3382) fixing the salaries of the Commissioner of Education and the Commissioner of Labor at $5,000 each per annum, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. It appears from the Journal that two bills have come over from the session of last evening with the previous question ordered upon their passage. Under the practice of the House they will be disposed of now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that they be passed over for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. Are those the two pension bills that have come over?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to their being laid aside.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think that these pension bills coming over from Friday evening sessions with the previous question ordered upon their passage ought to go over until the succeeding Friday.

Mr. RANDALL. They ought to go over only to the time when the practice of the House requires that they shall be disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. They are private bills, and if this practice is to be permitted, the Committee on Invalid Pensions can bring into the session of Saturday all the bills that have been considered at the Friday evening session and compel the House to devote the entire day to them. I think these bills ought to go over until next Friday. When we give one day in the week to private bills I think there ought to be no overlapping of that business, especially from the Friday night sessions, when, as is well known, very few members are present. I think it is taking advantage of the House to send over bills in this way.

Mr. RANDALL. This proceeding was not intended to take advantage of the House, but, on the contrary, to let these bills come into a full House, and, the previous question having been ordered upon them, they properly come up now, and they may as well be disposed of at one time as another.

Mr. SPRINGER. Only that they interrupt the regular business of the day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is quite right in his statement of the intent of the House in sending over these bills. There certainly was no intention to take any advantage of the House; on the contrary, the desire was to give the full House an opportunity to vote on them. But it does occur to me that, under the circumstances, the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is timely, and I suggest that, by unanimous consent, these bills be allowed to go over until next Friday.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. So do I.

The SPEAKER. It is true that Friday is set apart for the consideration of private bills, but it is also true that the House may and does consider private bills on other days, and the uniform practice of the House has been that when the previous question is ordered upon a bill it comes up in the House the next morning.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman. This is a question of order.

Mr. ROGERS. The House of Representatives, during my service here, have been disposed to give graceful treatment to all pension legislation, and have set apart Friday evenings for the disposition of that kind of business. Now, it occurs to me that that is as much of the time of the House as should be consumed by one class of legislation, especially when this kind of business is ordinarily done nem. con., and if the business of the House at the Friday night sessions, when only a few members are present, is to be forced over into the next day and put in such shape that it shall interfere with the next day's business or with the business of other days, then I give notice that there will be some members who will see that neither this class of business nor any other does come over in this way until there are full sessions of the House on Friday nights.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is due to the members who attend the Friday night sessions that I should make a brief statement.

I agree with the criticisms offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], but I regret exceedingly that members of the House are not present on Friday evenings to see that only proper legislation is had.

A MEMBER. That is the point.

Mr. TAULBEE. The object in sending these bills over was not to consume the time of the House to-day, which ought to be devoted to other business. They were sent over on my objection, because I did not think they ought to pass, and I was unwilling that they should pass unless a quorum decided otherwise. We passed several bills last night, but these two bills that have come over were not such as I thought ought to be disposed of in the absence of a quorum. Now, if the members who are willing to devote their time to this pension business on Friday evenings are to be held responsible for all the bad legislation that takes place, certainly gentlemen who bless us with their absence on such occasions ought not to complain if objectionable bills are sent over for the action of a full House. There is a remedy, and that is for members to attend the Friday night sessions, so as to have a quorum present and avoid putting the members who do attend in the awkward attitude, when objectionable bills are brought forward, of attempting to obstruct legislation by requiring the presence of a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word on this point. The action of the Friday night sessions is always unobjectionable. I do not know that the House at those sessions has ever passed a bill against which there is any valid objection, but where objection is made by any member to a bill at those sessions the House takes the very safest course possible by sending the bill over, so that it can be acted on by a full House; and I do not think there is any service that we can render that is much more important than doing justice to worthy applicants for pensions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 100, noes 19.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 126, noes 37.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. FINLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. EMILY M. WYMAN.

The next bill in order (having come over from last night's session with the previous question ordered upon its passage) was the bill (H. R. 4672) to increase the pension to Mrs. Emily M. Wyman.

The bill was read.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 104, noes 22.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FINLEY and Mr. TAULBEE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 29.

Mr. TAULBEE. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. FINLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, under the order made this morning, will now, without regularly calling the committees, recognize gentlemen who desire to present reports.

UNITED STATES COURT ROOMS, UTICA, N. Y.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 103) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts and officials to the city of Utica, N. Y.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 1537) to allow soldiers and sailors in the United States service who have lost both arms an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MEETINGS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ADAMS, in pursuance of leave heretofore granted, submitted in writing the views of a minority of the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill (H. R. 1290) to fix the times for the regular meetings of Congress; which were ordered to be printed.

WATCHMEN IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HALL (by Mr. WHEELER), from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6127) to determine and increase the pay of the watchmen in the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 7594) to change the common law of marriage to the customs of modern civilization by the emancipation of married women in the District of Columbia, the forts and arsenals, and the Territories of the United States; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6843) to authorize the Tennessee Midland Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River at any point on the line between the counties of Decatur and Perry, in the State of Tennessee, it may deem acceptable; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MICH.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill 3392, a bill (H. R. 8592) for the erection of a public building at Jackson, Mich.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 3392 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAGINAW, MICH.

Mr. NEWTON also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill 4976, a bill (H. R. 8593) for the erection of a public building at Saginaw, Mich.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 4976 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

ARMS, ETC., FOR OREGON MILITIA.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms, ammunition, and equipage to the State of Oregon for the militia thereof; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO SURVIVORS OF INDIAN WARS.

Mr. BARRY, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back, in lieu of House bills 1182, 1289, 1820, 1831, 1851, 1989, 3335, 4989, and 6160, a bill (H. R. 8594) granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bills 1182, 1289, 1820, 1831, 1851, 1989, 3335, 4989, and 6160 were, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

INDIAN SCHOOL, CARSON CITY, NEV.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments a bill (S. 1103) to provide for an Indian school at Carson City, Nev.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GREEN TWO-CENT POSTAGE-STAMP.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back adversely joint resolution (H. Res. 37) requesting the Postmaster-General to discontinue the use of the green two-cent postage-stamp and to return to the use of the two-cent-stamp of terra-cotta color; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further reports from committees the hour will begin for the consideration of bills.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to submit a resolution setting apart certain days for the consideration of business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. I must object to it unless it is introduced for reference to the Committee on Rules, and I will tell the gentleman from Mississippi why I object. The Committee on Rules have had a session and have taken these matters up and considered them.

Mr. HOOKER. I provide that the bills which are to be considered shall not interfere with appropriation or revenue bills.

Mr. RANDALL. Already thirty days have been asked by the committees of the House for the consideration of their special business.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope gentlemen will allow the House to act on this resolution without reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WEAVER. There are so many important measures to come up that I must object.

Mr. HOOKER. I move, then, the resolution be introduced for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday the 20th day of March and Thursday the 29th day of March and Thursday the 8th day of May, 1888, immediately after the hour for consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, in such order as may be designated by said committee, the order not to conflict with prior orders or revenue or general appropriation bills.

There was no objection, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

The SPEAKER. The hour begins for the consideration of bills, and the call rests upon the Committee on Labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Labor, setting apart certain days for the consideration of business coming from the Committee on Labor.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred House resolution 197, beg leave to report that they have considered the same, and report the following substitute, and request that it be adopted:

"Resolved, That Tuesday the 20th and Wednesday the 21st days of March, Wednesday, April 18th, and Wednesday, May 16th, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills and resolutions reported from the Committee on Labor; and that pending the consideration of said bills and resolutions all speeches be limited to fifteen minutes."

Mr. STEELE. Is there any bill on the Calendar from that committee?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, there are a number of bills upon the Calendar, and there are others ready to be reported from the committee.

Mr. MILLS. This is a very important proposition.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I retain the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the gentleman except revenue bills and appropriation bills?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No; I do not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nor bills coming from the Committee on Public Lands, nor the homestead bill, or others?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am glad these questions have been asked. Now, it will be remembered that on May 17, 1886, I moved to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That Thursday the 3d day of June be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on Labor, this order not to interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills, and whether so interfered with on that day or not, shall be a continuing order as above until the bills presented by said committee shall be disposed of.

Then Mr. REAGAN asked to insert the words "or prior orders," and Mr. HOLMAN "also reports from the Committee on Public Lands." During the remainder of the first session of that Congress the Committee on Labor was not able to obtain one moment from Congress. By allowing general appropriation and revenue bills to be excepted we were excluded whenever we attempted to get the floor.

Now, that is the plain English of it; and the gentleman from Indiana knows as well as I do that if you allow this matter to come in you never will have a labor bill acted upon in this House. I in my judgment it would effectually kill it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did you not have a day in the last Congress?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir, we did not. We had seven minutes under the call during the morning hour, and the only bills we passed were at a night session, when the point of no quorum prevented the transaction of the important business of the committee. They gave us a night session when a single objection killed every bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me ask the gentleman if at the night session we did not clear the Calendar?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir; not by any manner of means.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, if we did not clear the Calendar, we did a big work.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We passed some seven or eight bills, and you remember the storm, and the first thing we heard was the no-quorum echo.

Mr. McMILLIN. That did not prevent the passage, at that night session, as my friend will remember, of some very important bills.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am satisfied of that; we did pass some bills, and all the bills of that committee are important.

Mr. BRUMM. Was not the reason that committee was not reached, or the bills were not reached, because of the action of the so-called "steering" committee?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir; I do not believe it was the fault of the steering committee, but of the House.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, the House created the steering committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The fact of the matter is that they side-tracked our business, and we had no opportunity to present it and could not get enough men on this floor to enable us to call the ayes and noes. I remember when they engineered the trade-dollar against us and that took precedence; for the almighty dollar has far more influence than labor, unfortunately, in this House, and the consequence was we went up, then.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all we want is a little time so far as the committee's bills are concerned. We are reporting, in our judgment, bills that are in the interest of labor, and we want a fair consideration of them. We asked four days, because we have many very important bills. We are run up now almost to the first two days, the 20th and 21st, and then we thought it proper to ask one day in April and one in May. That is all, and we may not even need the whole time. Certainly we will not consume more than is necessary. All we ask is that you give us these four days to consider and pass these important bills, or to consider them at least in the House.

I believe the House is prepared now to vote on this question, and we have only an hour this morning, and so, not wishing to waste time, unless some gentleman desires to ask a further question, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to ask a question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he has not a bill already upon the Calendar creating what is called the department—the executive department of agriculture?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. I mean the department of labor?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir; we have a bill pending in committee simply to create a department of labor.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I want to ask if he proposes to discuss a bill of that importance in fifteen minutes on each side?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why, my friend, that bill has not yet even been considered in committee.

Mr. ROGERS. But that does not answer the question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, then, what can I answer?

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman proposes that such a bill as that should be considered and acted upon finally by this House in fifteen minutes?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I know this, that one of the greatest mischiefs in this House to-day is the continuance in force of what is called the hour rule. It ought long since to have been abolished. The very best speeches made on this floor are made under a brief limitation. The fact of the matter is, and the gentleman from Arkansas knows as well as I do, that when a man gets an hour to make a speech on this floor as a rule he talks to empty seats.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not ask whether the gentleman is going to limit one man to fifteen minutes or allow the hour rule to prevail, but whether he expects such a bill as this to pass the House in fifteen minutes.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, no; not by any means. The idea is that each member shall only consume fifteen minutes. It does not seek by any means to limit the House to that time. Is not fifteen minutes long enough for you and for me?

Mr. ROGERS. I think about one-third of that time is twice as much as the gentleman ought usually to consume.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I usually do get through in five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to state to the gentleman from Missouri that it has been the custom in the adoption of resolutions of this character, setting apart days for the consideration of special orders, to exempt bills reported from the Committee on Ways and Means and by the Committee on Appropriations for consideration. Now, it is known to the House that we have passed no bills from the Appropriations Committee. We are away behind.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS. And the gentleman ought to make an exception at least in that regard.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If the cause of labor——

Mr. MILLS. Oh, well, as far as that is concerned, we are all laborers.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. All laborers?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, as far as that is concerned, each one of us.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. When your tariff bill is brought in here everything is to be side-tracked to give it the right of way.

Mr. MILLS. And ought to be.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not blame you for that.

Mr. MILLS. I presume not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Because you are the chairman of that committee, and I am the chairman of the Committee on Labor and working in the interest of that committee.

I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me for a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has submitted a proposition to the House, and I claim the right to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to one hour, and has announced his intention to call the previous question. If the previous question should be ordered, that, of course, would cut off other gentlemen from taking part in the debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to be heard on this question. I am in favor of giving the committee time, but I am not in favor of the fifteen-minute gag. I represent more men who work than does the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman from Missouri accept an amendment to except revenue and appropriation bills?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I would as soon see the resolution defeated at once. To make that exception would be its death.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is aware there has been prepared for the consideration of the House a bill to secure to actual settlers what remains of the public domain, and there are other bills to declare the forfeiture of lands heretofore granted that they may be restored to the public domain. Does the gentleman know of any subject in which the laborers of this country have more interest than in that?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If the gentleman from Indiana will introduce those bills and have them referred to the Committee on Labor, we will report them back without loss of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not except those bills?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I except nothing. I move the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri, before insisting on the previous question, yield to me for a moment?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is a proposition to set apart certain days for the consideration of bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Labor. There are already several such bills on the Calendar accompanied by unanimous reports from the committee, I believe, in each instance. That committee is satisfied the only way to have those bills reached and considered in this Congress is to have certain days set apart for that purpose. Already the Committee on Banking and Currency, representing the great moneyed interest of the country, have had their day. Already the Committee on Commerce, representing other interests—and I use the expression in no offensive sense—have had their day. And the Committee on the Judiciary and other committees have had days set apart for their business without so much opposition as appears to be offered now, without so much outcry against it. I can not understand why those four days of the present session of the American Congress can not be devoted to the consideration of bills which affect vitally the interests of a large number of the people of the United States who can not be heard in any other way.

I think this bill ought to pass as reported; but if there are provisions in it which are obnoxious to some members of this House, let them vote those provisions down. We put in the fifteen-minute limitation because we thought the House would be more willing to agree to the resolution with that proviso, that only fifteen minutes should be allowed to each member on each bill. If the resolution be adopted, we will undoubtedly be enabled to bring forward and have considered a number of measures now on the Calendar and others which will be reported before the time fixed in the resolution. I earnestly hope the resolution will be adopted, and that unanimously.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me for one minute?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has named several committees which have had their days. He might have named some others—the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would have done so had the names occurred to me.

Mr. COX. He might have named also the Committee on Appropriations. I desire to say this, that there are gentlemen here who are anxious about appropriations and anxious about the revenue bill; and I do not quarrel with gentlemen for not bringing in those bills earlier. This is the long session and I can not say they are dilatory, for they are not. They are doing their work in committee.

But here is a committee charged with a subject with which are connected the most important interests of all our people. That committee has not had sufficient opportunity. It was not fairly treated in the last Congress, according to my reading of the RECORD. The gentleman from Missouri, I think, is entitled to at least four days, if not more, for the consideration of measures reported by his committee.

It is not a question as to the merits of these bills. I do not propose to discuss their merits. Nor do I propose at this time to discuss the merits of the bills reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or by any other member. But I will say the bulk of the work of this Congress has been in relation to the South and West, and has not tended to help the people who labor in large cities.

I therefore appeal to the gentlemen on this side of the House, and particularly my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS], to allow these days to be fixed for the consideration of the interests of these laboring men; so that when they are compelled to come here in person asking for this legislation they shall not have to go back disappointed.

Mr. MILLS. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the previous question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask whether the question may not be divided so that members may vote for that part of the resolution which grants four days to the Committee on Labor, which I am heartily in favor of, but against the application of the fifteen-minute rule? I am opposed to that because members who may support these bills or who may oppose them ought not to be gagged by the fifteen-minute rule of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair will say the first question is on the demand for the previous question. If the previous question should be ordered by the House, no amendment, of course, would be in order. But the Chair thinks the two propositions contained in the resolution are entirely distinct. The first, setting apart four days, may be voted upon separately; and then the other, "that pending the consideration of said bills and resolutions all speeches be limited to fifteen minutes." Each proposition may stand by itself. The question now is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] moves to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that pending the demand for the previous question the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] moves to commit the resolution and the proposed substitute to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let us take that vote by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be reported.

The substitute was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Rules, and upon that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move as an amendment that the Committee on Rules be instructed to report on this subject on Monday next?

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Texas in that way.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. MILLS. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOOKER. And to report on all other applications of a like character. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] as amended by the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], and upon this question the yeas and nays are demanded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will it be in order for me to object to allowing any gentleman to vote after the second roll-call?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order for the gentleman to object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want to give notice that I will do so.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 55, nays 182, not voting 87; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I voted in the affirmative on this question, but did so inadvertently, as I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES]. I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I was necessarily absent when my name was called. If present, I would have voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the additional pairs.

The following-named members were announced as paired on all political questions for the remainder of the day:

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. DIBBLE. If present, Mr. MILLIKEN would vote "ay" on this question.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In view of the vote which the House has just given, I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to the adoption of the pending resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish to put a question to the Chair for information. On next Monday, as I understand, the Committee on Labor will be again entitled to one hour, when this matter can again come up.

The SPEAKER. Not on Monday, but on Tuesday. On Monday there is no consideration hour for committees.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] enters a motion to reconsider the vote just taken. The consideration hour has expired; the Chair entertains the motion simply because it is a privileged motion which might be made at any time within this or the next legislative day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order now, but will be in order when this subject is again taken up.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It will be in order so as to occupy time with another dilatory motion when our hour comes again.

Mr. LONG. I wish to submit to the Chair a parliamentary question. Is a motion to reconsider in order with reference to the previous question, the previous question having been ordered?

The SPEAKER. Always. The motion is to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. LONG. The previous question having been ordered, it would seem that the main question must be taken at once; and how can there be a motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. Simply because the rules of the House and of general parliamentary law allow a motion to reconsider on all questions and make it a privileged motion. Tha gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], who voted with the majority, moves to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The consideration hour having expired during the roll-call just taken, how can the gentleman from Arkansas move to reconsider after that hour is passed?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider this vote could be made on next Monday.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. But the hour having expired during the roll-call, how can the gentleman make any motion relating to business transacted solely within that hour?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the gentleman could make this motion at any time to-day or next Monday. This is a privileged motion, the rules providing that in respect to any vote a motion to reconsider shall be in order at any time "on the same or succeeding day."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. A motion to reconsider having been made after the termination of the morning hour, and also a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, is it not in order at this time to proceed to vote upon the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair did not even put to a vote the question of reconsideration; but the motion to reconsider, as the Chair has stated, is one which, under the rules, may be made at any time on the day when the original question is taken or on the succeeding legislative day.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; disagreed to the amendments of the House to certain amendments of the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes.

OLIVE WALLACE.

Mr. GROUT. Last evening the House passed a bill (H. R. 4106) granting a pension to Olive Wallace. An amendment, which had been recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and agreed to in Committee of the Whole House, was not acted on when the bill was passed by the House, as is shown by both the RECORD and the Journal. The amendment proposes to insert, after "pension-roll" in the fourth line, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be made.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote passing the bill mentioned and also the vote ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time will be reconsidered; the amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions will be regarded as adopted; and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will make the proper entry.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back to the House the bill (H. R. 7901) to secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect forests on the public domain, and for other purposes. I ask that the bill be taken up now for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] reports for present consideration a bill from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that privileged?

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that all bills reported by the Committee on Public Lands "for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad or other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the preservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual settlers," shall be privileged. The Chair supposes this is a bill coming within the rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. But if this bill should contain other matter than that relating to the protection of the public lands for the benefit of settlers, would it then be privileged?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that a bill reported from this committee might include matters having no relation to the public lands or to the privileged subjects mentioned in the rule, and thus might lose its privilege; but the Chair will state that in such a bill all provisions relating to the preservation of the public lands for actual settlers, and providing the means for accomplishing that object, are certainly privileged; otherwise the privilege would amount to nothing.

Mr. DINGLEY. I merely desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether this bill contains only propositions relating to the preservation of the public lands for settlers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, it goes beyond that, and embraces provisions in regard to timber lands, providing for the preservation of those lands in a general way; but the main purpose of the bill, its leading feature, is the protection of the public lands for actual settlers. That is the leading, and almost the only, purpose of it, as the gentleman will observe when the bill is read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read, and after being read shall be opened to reasonable debate for such time as the House may think proper; that amendments may then be submitted to the bill without reference to the rules of the House, and be voted on in the order in which they may be submitted.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be understood that the question whether this bill is privileged or not is reserved until the bill has been read.

The SPEAKER. That question will be reserved.

Mr. LAIRD. In the Forty-eighth Congress an act repealing the preemption and timber-culture laws was put through this House under a suspension of the rules. This is a matter which very seriously affects the Western country. This bill embraces some good features, and I think some bad ones. I would like to know what the policy of the gentleman in charge of the bill is to be in regard to allowing debate and amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I stated a moment ago—I presume my voice was not loud enough to reach the gentleman—that I asked unanimous consent that the bill be read for the information of the House; that then it be open for such debate as the House may deem proper; that amendments be submitted without reference to the rules of the House, and be voted upon, until the previous question be ordered, in their regular order.

Mr. LAIRD. What time does the gentleman from Indiana propose to give in debate against the bill?

Mr. COX. If there are any matters connected with legislation outside of the rule, I understand the rule to be as decided by the Speaker pro tempore the other day, that is, where there appears on the face of the bill something not within the category of the rule, it is not privileged. The Chair intimated it is well to have the bill read if the matter is to be reserved. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider it, we may get rid of the point of order and go on with the business and save the afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked the bill be read on the point of order, which can not be decided until it is read, and then he asked unanimous consent that amendments be allowed without regard to the rules of the House, that is, gentlemen having amendments could send them up and have them read and considered as pending to be acted upon in the order in which they are offered. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON. What time is to be allowed for general debate?

Mr. HOLMAN. Reasonable time.

Mr. NELSON. Does the gentleman propose to allow general debate on the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAIRD. I understand the House is not to be precluded from amending the bill when it comes to be read by sections.

The SPEAKER. The bill will not be read except by unanimous consent. The House is not in the Committee of the Whole. What the gentleman from Indiana proposes is that gentlemen having amendments to submit can send them up to the desk and have them read, and they are to be considered as pending, and to be acted upon in the order in which they are offered.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has ruled it is necessary to have the bill read in order to determine whether it is privileged or not.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. ADAMS. To determine whether it is privileged or not. I do not know whether it is privileged or not, but I wish the question to be determined by the Chair.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Enough has been read to raise the point of order. I do not wish the bill to be claimed to be a privileged one when it is not. I ask the Chair to rule on section 2 that it is not a privileged bill. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent I, for one, will not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question is raised under the rule of the House. The language of the rule is as follows:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising the revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on the Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

There are three propositions: One is, bills declaring forfeitures; second, bills preventing speculation; and, thirdly, bills reserving public lands for the benefit of actual settlers.

I submit to the Chair the provisions of this bill come within the last clauses of the rule. The bill prevents speculation in the public lands by reservation, for instance, of forest lands from sale. The provisions of the bill are applied exclusively to secure the remaining public land to actual settlers under the homestead laws. The necessary preliminary provisions of the bill seek to reserve the public land for settlement. The main provision is that one which dedicates the public lands to agriculture and all other lands not specially enumerated under the provisions of the homestead law. I wish to further call attention to this fact. There is a mineral law in force. That law is limited. That is to say, the amount of lands coming now under the operation of the mineral law, lands now devoted to mineral operations, are restricted in the interest of lands coming under the homestead law. There is a desert-land law. That desert-land law is restricted in the interest of the homestead law. There is a timber-culture law, and that is also restricted in the interest of homestead. So far as legislation is concerned this bill is in the interest of the homestead law, and its intention is to protect the public lands from speculation.

Mr. ADAMS. The reason I brought the question up by interrupting the reading of the bill was to have it determined before we proceeded any further. It is evident that the bill is partly privileged and partly not privileged.

Mr. HOLMAN. What part?

Mr. ADAMS. It has been decided that a matter can not be privileged which contains other matter not privileged in its character.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a correct proposition: that a bill which contains two separate matters, one of which is privileged under the rules of the House and the other is not, is subject to the point of order. That is to say, the insertion of matter which was not privileged destroys the privileged character of the other, and therefore subjects the entire proposition to the point of order. As, for instance, when the Committee on Public Printing reports a resolution providing for printing for use of the two Houses, and in the same resolution inserts a provision for printing for the use of the Departments of the Government, the latter part of the resolution not being privileged destroys the privileged character of the whole.

This is quite a long bill. The Chair has given it some attention, but may not thoroughly understand its purposes and provisions. It seems to be a bill the principal object of which is to preserve the public lands for actual settlers. It is true the bill relates also to timber lands, mineral lands, and desert lands; but, so far as the Chair has been able to ascertain from such examination of the bill as it has been able to make, these provisions simply enlarge the area of the public domain subject to entry and settlement under the homestead law. In other words, a part of the lands which can now be taken up under existing law as timber lands, or mineral lands, or desert lands, will, if this bill passes, be subject to entry hereafter under the homestead law only.

The Chair does not think that such a provision as that would destroy the privileged character of the bill; because a bill might be introduced which simply related to the timber lands, making all that class of lands subject to entry under the homestead law only; or a similar bill relating exclusively to the mineral lands might also be introduced, making all that class of lands subject to entry under the homestead law only, and such bills would be privileged. In other words, it is impossible to enlarge the area of the public lands subject to entry under the homestead law without in some way legislating in respect to lands that are not now subject to homestead entry.

Mr. ADAMS. I will ask the attention of the Chair to the title of this bill:

To secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests on the public domain, and for other purposes.

This has reference, it will be seen, also to the forests.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to add that it may be possible there is some provision in this bill in relation to the preservation of the timber upon the public lands——

Mr. HOLMAN. There is such a provision——

The SPEAKER. Which provision would have some bearing upon the question of order presented. The Chair has not yet carefully examined with reference to that point. The title would indicate that there is some provision in relation to the timber on the lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is such a provision, but it protects such lands from speculators.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair desires to look at.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the sections of this bill providing for the disposition of timber upon the public domain and reserving from sale the lands upon which the timber is located have a tendency, unless materially amended, to allow speculators in this country to buy up all the timber and hold it. And the very object that I give the gentleman from Indiana credit for having in view in the preparation of this bill, the object of preserving these lands for actual settlers, will be defeated by the particular provisions of the bill itself.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is absolutely impossible; and I do not think the gentleman has carefully read the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SYMES. I have made the statement on an examination of the bill and can prove it; but I do not care to elaborate it on the point of order.

This bill prohibits the entry by any man, any pioneer or farmer, of a little piece of mountain timber land for actual use in connection with his ranch or to make improvements under the homestead law. It would effectually prevent it. It provides for putting up for sale all the timber upon lands of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the contrary, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, it is just the reverse. The main purpose is to limit the disposition of the timber lands.

Mr. SYMES. I give the gentleman credit for saying that that is the main purpose he has in view; and I believe it to be what he supposes it is. But I will state that the bill will bring about the actual opposite tendency from what he believes. The difference between purpose and effect is often very great with gentlemen who imagine they can bring in a bill here to reform the whole land system of the United States, when they have not had practical knowledge of the workings of that system only from a distance and upon theory.

I say and repeat that this bill prevents any pioneer from entering a 40-acre piece of timber land upon the mountain side near his ranch, so as to preserve it for timber purposes for his own use. He has to go to a public sale, to a cash sale, and bid in the timber against any one who sees fit to bid against him. After that he has to remove the timber from the public lands; and he is not allowed to enter a little piece upon the mountain side, valuable for no other purpose, present or future, and to no other person, except to furnish the timber for his ranch. And he must remove it within a definite period and take the chance of speculators buying it all up before he is able to do so.

Mr. LAIRD. This is a bill to depopulate the timber lands of the United States.

Mr. SYMES. That is exactly what it is; and I make the point of order that it is not to reserve to the homesteader or pioneer the use of the timber lands, but to allow the sale of that timber, to his detriment, in a great measure.

Mr. MACDONALD. As a member of the Committee on Public Lands I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Colorado that I apprehend my experience in the public-land States is just as great as his is, amounting as it does to thirty-three years, and I disagree with him in toto as to the effect of this bill. We will discuss that when the bill is properly before the House. The question here for the Chair to consider is whether or not this is a bill to prevent speculation in the public lands or a bill for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers. I insist it is both.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SYMES. I will ask the gentleman, who is familiar with this bill because he is a member of the Public Lands Committee, whether it provides for putting up at auction and sale and requiring the removal of timber from the public domain within a definite period and does not permit the pioneer or ranchman to buy any of it for his use in the future?

Mr. MACDONALD. That is a question which will come up when the bill is under discussion.

Mr. SYMES. Does the gentleman claim that I misstate the fact?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman does misstate the fact when he speaks of other persons being deprived of the right to purchase the timber. Their rights are equal, to the extent of 40 acres.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the timber provisions of this bill are calculated to reserve the lands for the settlers. They simply provide that where the lands are covered with timber of a merchantable character the timber shall be sold and the proceeds saved for the people of the United States, to be afterwards disposed of for other purposes. I submit that comes clearly within the spirit of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to understand whether those lands are now subject to entry under the homestead law.

Mr. NELSON. They are, under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is correct as to a portion of the timber lands, but not as to all of them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call attention to the rule of the House which gives privilege to—

Bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

Now, whether this bill would actually prevent speculation in the public lands is not the question before the Chair. The question is whether the object of the bill is to prevent speculation in the public lands. As to whether it will have that effect, there may be a difference of opinion. The gentleman from Colorado may be of opinion that it will not have that effect. The gentleman from Minnesota and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands are of opinion that it does have that effect. But it certainly has that object in view, unless we are to impugn the motives of the committee and say their object is to squander the public domain and let speculators have it.

If there is any reason why the committee should report this bill that reason is found in the language of this rule, which authorizes them to report bills preventing speculation in the public lands and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers. I have gone through the various portions of this bill, and there is no clause in it that can not be classified by taking the view the committee intended should be taken of it under one or the other of these heads.

The bill is intended in all its provisions to provide for withdrawing the public domain from speculation; and there are thrown around it, by the repeal of existing laws and otherwise, safeguards and protection, the object of which is that no part of the public domain shall be hereafter within the reach of speculators, and at the same time there shall be preserved such portions of it as are adapted to homesteads for agricultural purposes.

Our rule is rendered nugatory if this is not considered privileged, because any gentleman chooses to rise in his place and say he does not think the bill accomplishes the object intended by its promoters to be accomplished.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to make a single suggestion and in doing so to emphasize the view just taken by my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER].

In determining whether or not so much of this bill as relates to timber lands is obnoxious to the point of order it must be borne in mind what the existing evil is which it is desired to remedy and whether it is one of which the Chair can take judicial notice.

It is a matter of familiar experience to members of this House who have ever had occasion to look into the subject that the timber lands of this country have been fruitful fields for speculation ever since we have had a public-land system, and I hazard nothing in saying there has been more money made out of improvident legislation by those who have dealt in the timber lands of this country than by any other means, notably in the northwestern portion of the country and on the Pacific Slope. Year after year, as the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Public Lands have been sent to this body, the attention of Congress has been called to the fact that the timber lands of this country, worth actually $5, $10, $50—in some cases $100 and $150 an acre—under the operation of existing law have been susceptible of acquisition, in one way or another, at the price of $1.25 in many sections of the country, and nowhere in the Union at a higher price than $2.50 an acre.

In the northwestern part of the Union, as we understand it, and in the regions of the Great Lakes at the North, at the price of $1.25 per acre, all of the pine lands of that region have been acquired by methods devious in their operation and startling in their results to those who have opportunity to examine the matter. On the Pacific Slope, as everybody who has looked into the question knows, the great redwood forests of California have been taken in by syndicates of capitalists under the improvident act of 1873, never at a higher price than $2.50 per acre. And so, Mr. Speaker, the question has been submitted to the Committee on Public Lands to see whether some means can not be devised by which this business of speculating in the public lands may be stopped, and the provisions of this bill with reference to the preservation of the forests look to that end and to that alone, not merely to preserve the public lands for actual settlers in time to come, but to prevent present speculation in them. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is utterly immaterial for the purposes of this point of order whether the means that have been reported to the House by the Committee on Public Lands will ultimately turn out to be successful or not, or whether their theory shall turn out to be the proper one. It is enough for the purposes of this point of order that, in the judgment of the committee, this method is deemed the best, and that the recommendations which they make have that end in view, leaving it to the House to determine whether this is the proper policy or not. Now, that is not only the avowed object of the bill, but by an examination of its provisions, in connection with the suggestions and recommendations of the executive officers of the Government for the last ten years, the Speaker can not fail to see that the object the committee have here in view is to prevent this speculation from going any further than it has gone.

The SPEAKER. Under the law as it now exists these timber lands may be entered either under the pre-emption law or the homestead law, unless the Chair is mistaken in his recollection.

Mr. RYAN. The Chair is correct.

Mr. PAYSON. The Chair is absolutely right.

The SPEAKER. But if this bill passes they can be entered only under the homestead law by actual settlers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the bill, as I understand it, provides that the timber lands shall be sold at not less than $10 per acre.

Mr. McRAE. No. Under this bill no lands can be sold unless they are unfit for cultivation, whether they are mineral or timber lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that under the provisions of this bill, as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], no land can be sold unless it is unfit for cultivation.

Mr. LAIRD. Under this bill the title to the land does not pass from the Government, but the title to the timber passes, and the timber has to be removed from the land within five years. That is the point made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES], that this bill deforests the timber lands of the country.

Mr. McRAE. This bill does not provide for selling the timber on any land that is fit for cultivation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that if the land is agricultural land this timber provision does not apply to it at all.

Mr. SYMES. That is correct; but this bill deals with timber lands and provides for the sale of the timber.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But, under this bill, no land is regarded as timber land unless it is unfit for cultivation.

The SPEAKER. And even that land may be entered afterwards under the homestead law. As the law now exists these lands may be acquired either under the homestead law or under the pre-emption law, but if this bill passes they will be preserved for actual settlers. Therefore the bill aims to preserve the public land for actual settlers, and comes within the rule. The Chair is not under the necessity of deciding whether the bill will prevent speculation or not. It may or may not do that. But unless the Chair misunderstands the provisions of the bill, it comes within the last clause of the rule; that is, it is a bill to preserve the public lands for actual settlers. The Chair therefore thinks the bill is privileged.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. That must be done anyway.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that then it shall be open to amendment, the amendments to be submitted without reference to order; and that after such debate as the House may think proper to allow, the amendments be voted upon in the order of their submission.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. As I understand it, amendments may be offered at any time before the previous question is seconded?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. And I understand that there is no disposition on the part of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to limit debate or amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not say as to that, because I have not consulted with the other members of the committee, and I do not know how much time may be allowed.

Mr. SYMES. Can the gentleman intimate how much time he is willing to give for debate and amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. There will be a reasonable time, of course.

Mr. LAIRD. Can the gentleman indicate what his policy is to be in the conduct of this bill as to allowing time for debate and amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. What time does the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] desire?

Mr. SYMES. I am not here making points to antagonize the consideration of this bill, nor am I here for the purpose of trying to defeat all of its provisions. I am here only to try to perfect the bill so as to secure these lands, whether timber or not timber lands, for actual settlers.

Mr. HOLMAN. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. SYMES. I want to know whether there is to be done in this case what, I am sorry to say, is so often done in this House, when gentlemen get up here and propose a bill and say there is no disposition to limit amendment or debate, and then, about the third hour of its consideration, we are limited and have no opportunity for debate. I want an intimation whether three hours or three days are to be considered as the proper time for debate and amendment of this important bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to inquire whether it would be agreeable to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that amendments be offered now so that they may appear in the RECORD?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that any gentleman desiring to do so may submit amendments to the bill, and that they be considered as pending, to be voted on ultimately in the order in which they are offered.

Mr. PETERS. How long a time will be given for the preparation of amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose until the debate closes.

Mr. PETERS. It will be impossible for some of us to prepare our amendments and present them now; but if we are to have an opportunity to offer them during the debate——

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose it ought to be understood that amendments may be offered at any time until the previous question is called.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I wish to add this further proposition—that debate on amendments be limited to fifteen minutes on each side.

A MEMBER. Fifteen minutes on each side on each separate amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all members be allowed to offer amendments until the previous question is called, the amendments to be voted on ultimately in their order as offered, and that debate on each amendment be limited to fifteen minutes on each side. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know whether amendments are to be read or simply printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me a moment, I desire to make a suggestion. It is Saturday afternoon. A large number of amendments have been ordered to be printed in the RECORD. The subject is an important one, and I suggest to the gentleman a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield for that purpose.

CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to present the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee, to consist of seven members, whose duty it shall be to fully examine and inquire into the condition of the civil service in all the Departments and branches of the Government, and whether or not the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, and the several acts amendatory thereto, have been, at all times since their passage, observed and carried out, and what beneficial results, if any, have inured to the civil service of the Government by reason of said acts.

Second. Said committee is hereby authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer, and shall have the power to administer oaths, send for persons and papers, to sit in such places as may be necessary, and to conduct its investigations through subcommittees, the expenses of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and a full report of its proceedings shall be made to the House at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

REPRINT OF THE PUBLIC-LAND BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill, in relation to the land laws, may be reprinted, as I understand the copies have been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILL 6897.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair). The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, April 4, 1888, after the morning hour for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6897, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to relieve purchasers of, and to indemnify certain States for, swamp and overflowed lands erroneously disposed of by the United States, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or prior orders; and if displaced by any cause, or not disposed of on that day, then Wednesday of each subsequent week shall be set apart, subject to the same exceptions and limitations, until the said bill shall be disposed of by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McRAE. I wish to state that I offer this resolution at the request of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. I think that ought to go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LAIRD. Will the gentleman allow the Military Committee to submit an amendment giving a special day to that committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and moves its reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman will not object, but let us have the consideration of this at once.

Mr. STEELE. They sent us to the Committee on Rules to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It only requires an objection to prevent its being acted upon now. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana as objecting; and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McRAE. I want it to be considered now if possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules?

The question was taken, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

DUTY ON LUMBER.

Mr. MOFFITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of lumbermen of Northern New York, protesting against any reduction in the duties on lumber, have it printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

There was no objection.

It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The undersigned, manufacturers of lumber in the county of Franklin and State of New York, respectfully present for your consideration the following statement in regard to this important industry, with an earnest protest against any change in the existing tariff on lumber.

We are situated so near to the Canadian frontier that a reduction of the small duty now exacted would take away all the profit now enjoyed, unless it could be saved by a reduction of the wages paid the laborers engaged in the work. Fully four-fifths of the cost of lumber is in the wages paid, and these wages are based upon giving a fair return for the labor expended, and are from 50 to 75 per cent. in excess of those paid by the Canadian lumbermen with whom we compete, and in the aggregate amount to at least $3 per 1,000 feet more than paid to the Canadians for the same work. Should the duty be removed and the rates of wages in this country be maintained as at present, we, in common with others, would be compelled to shut up our mills. This would throw out of employment a vast army of workmen, and drive them into other occupations, thereby creating a fresh competition in the labor market, and tending to diminish the income of all wage earners. This in turn would take away their purchasing ability and curtail the market for other producers, thus throwing still other laborers out of employment, and yet further deranging the entire business of the communities, and so of the nation. In time the pangs of hunger would compel a resumption of labor in some field, but at the starvation wages paid in other lands, and in the distant future, on the basis of lower wages, the lumber industry might be resumed, but after a complete demoralization and the ruin of hundreds of men engaged in it to-day.

If the reduction in price claimed by the advocates of the removal of the duty should be made, who would get the benefit of it? The Canadians have millions of feet of lumber awaiting a favorable time for shipment, and would get the opportunity of supplying the immediate demand. That accomplished and the home manufacturers being driven from the market, the citizens of our neighboring Dominion would hold absolute control, and our builders would be at their mercy. Then, with a wasted trade, demolished mills, and lack of properly trained laborers, our manufacturers could again seek to supply the demand which a careless act of legislation had taken from them.

The supply of timber in our Adirondack forests is in no danger of being exhausted by those who operate according to the plan pursued by your petitioners, for they cut only the large timber, leaving the smaller trees for further growth. In this way the preservation of the forests as regulators of moisture is not injured, and the sources of water supply are maintained. The hemlock timber on most of the tracts is cut for the use of tanners, and the logs are saved for the lumbermen. The spruce supply is in some sections dying rapidly, and to prevent great loss to the owners this must soon be cut. The supply of pine is not large, and the hard-wood can not be manufactured to any considerable extent at a profit with present railroad facilities and at present prices.

The discontinuance of the lumber business in our county would entail serious consequences on a host of other industries dependent on the consuming power of the fifteen thousand people supported by this industry. The store-keepers, produce dealers, millers, machinists, farmers, railroads, all depend largely upon the prosperity of the lumbermen. Such discontinuance would entail upon the manufacturers who have been for years engaged in establishing their business and locating and preserving their vast forest possessions an almost irretrievable ruin. The cost of the mills in this county is upwards of a quarter of a million of dollars, and the value of the timber lands, if the tariff is maintained, is reckoned by millions.

The conditions existing here are not very different from those in other States, and when the great aggregate of laborers employed is taken into account, the disastrous effects of a repeal of the present small tariff duty, which is felt by no consumer of lumber and yields a comparatively insignificant revenue to the Government, are so appalling that we are constrained to enter our vigorous protest against so ruinous a measure.

Respectfully submitted February, 1888.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa, favoring the passage of the bill for the relief of the settlers upon what are commonly known as the Des Moines River lands. I ask that the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD, and as the bill has been reported from the committee and is now on the Calendar, the resolution may lie on the table.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth General Assemblies of the State of Iowa, by joint resolutions, duly approved by the governor, petitioned the Congress of the United States for relief to the settlers upon what are commonly known as the Des Moines River lands; and

Whereas grievous litigation is now pending in the court of the United States, relating to the title and rights of the settlers to and upon said lands, upon which said settlers located in good faith, and have made valuable improvements and have for many years made their homes; and

Whereas, on account of the very great hardship that has been brought about by the conflicting decisions aforesaid, great disturbance and trouble has already risen and is likely to arise unless some satisfactory and just action be taken by the State and General Government relating to this subject: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of Iowa (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to favor the immediate passage of the bill lately introduced in the Senate of the United States by Hon. JAMES F. WILSON, and now pending in Congress, in so far as it has for its object to provide that the Attorney-General of the United States to immediately commence proceedings, or cause such proceedings to be instituted by suit, either in law or in equity, or both, as may be necessary, and appear in the name of the United States so as to remove all clouds from the title to said lands, in which suits any person or persons in possession of, or claiming title to, any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits, to the end that the title or titles of any person or persons claiming said lands may be forever settled.

WASHINGTON CITY POST-OFFICE.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5617) to provide for the leasing of premises for the Washington city post-office, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a very short bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be empowered to lease suitable premises in the city of Washington for the purposes of the Washington city post-office.

Mr. SAWYER. I will state that the Postmaster-General is now authorized to lease post-offices of the first and second class in every place in the United States except the city of Washington; but there is a law which provides that the Government shall not lease any building in this city unless an appropriation is first made especially for that purpose. The present city post-office is a very bad affair, and the owners have doubled up on the rent from the 1st of January. The Postmaster-General is entirely powerless to do anything unless we pass this bill, and I have therefore asked for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. VEST. I should like to inquire whether there is any limitation as to this lease. Is there any time fixed in the bill?

Mr. SAWYER. No, there is not. It simply puts the post-office in the city of Washington on the same footing and in the same condition with the rest of the post-offices in the United States of the first and second class. It allows the Department to rent a post-office building.

Mr. VEST. There is a limitation in the general law, however, is there not?

Mr. SAWYER. No; there is no limitation, except a provision that the Postmaster-General shall not rent a building beyond the time appropriated for; and of course the office here would come under the same law. The Postmaster-General can not rent a building for a longer period than is covered by an appropriation; nor can he do so under this bill.

Mr. VEST. We have passed a bill for the erection of a post-office building here, and I should not like to give the Department authority to run a lease for ten or twenty years.

Mr. SAWYER. This will only bring the Washington city post-office under the same law as the other first and second class post-offices throughout the country.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALMON FISHERIES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a letter of the Secretary of War, in response to a Senate resolution of January 27, on the subject of salmon fisheries in the Columbia River. By direction of the committee I ask that the letter be ordered to be printed, the usual number only, with the accompanying report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made if there be no objection.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Statistical Abstracts of the United States for the year 1887, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

BRIDGES OVER STREAMS WITHIN STATE LIMITS.

Mr. VEST. The following resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the right and expediency of Congress assuming control of the erection of bridges over navigable waters or streams within State limits, and to report by bill or otherwise.

I am instructed by that committee to submit a report in writing, and I ask that it be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

REPORT ON FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit a written report on the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, which was reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses on the 15th instant, and I ask that 1,000 extra copies of the report be printed. I understand from investigation the cost will be only $8 or $10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon submits a written report upon the bill named by him, which has already been reported, and asks that 1,000 extra copies of the report be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will say that I have investigated the matter, and am satisfied that the cost will be less than the amount fixed by the law, so that it will be within the power of the Senate to order the printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, such will be the order of the Senate.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, in the morning hour, I shall call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that the order of business to-day and also to-morrow will be the Calendar under Rule VIII. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, with the leave of the Senate, I shall ask to take up for consideration the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] referring the President's message to the Finance Committee, in order that I may submit some remarks upon it.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the Calendar is in order under Rule VIII, and the first bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. PALMER. I move that 2 o'clock one week from to-day be fixed as the hour when the Senate shall take up for consideration the bill (S. 2083) to provide for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and to facilitate the exportation of live-stock and their products, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases among domestic animals, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the bill indicated by him be made the special order of the day for next Monday at 2 o'clock. The title of the bill will be read at the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2083) to provide for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and to facilitate the exportation of live-stock and their products, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases among domestic animals, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan. [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to; and the order is made, two-thirds of the Senate concurring therein.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall now go on with the Calendar by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALL. I did not understand that that question was to be voted on at the moment. I understood the Chair simply to state the question, that it was moved that the bill in relation to pleuro-pneumonia be made the special order of the day. I do not think the vote was understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was made the special order for one week from to-day.

Mr. CALL. I do not think Senators generally understood the question.

Mr. PLATT. The order was for one week from to-day, and the then occupant of the chair put the motion. I do not know whether the Senate understood it or not.

Mr. CALL. I did not understand it. I think the vote should be taken over again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be any general misunderstanding, by unanimous consent the question will be again taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was very plainly announced. Everybody on this side understood it.

Mr. ALLISON. The title of the bill was read at the Secretary's desk.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any rate a majority of the Senate can at any time postpone the bill when it comes up. It is not a matter of great moment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS. Just before the adjournment on Friday evening I moved that the bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., be made the special order for Wednesday next at 2 o'clock. The motion was misconstrued and misunderstood by two or three Senators. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was kind enough to make some rather uncharitable comments upon my having made such a motion, in view of the fact that a few evenings before I had given notice that I should insist upon the execution of Rule VIII, which devotes the morning hour up to 2 o'clock every day to the consideration of bills and resolutions on the Calendar.

My motion was to make a special order, beginning at 2 o'clock on Wednesday, and not to interfere with the morning hour of any day.

No one knows better than the Senator from Massachusetts that there are a large number of bills on the Calendar that can not be considered under Rule VIII, which limits debate to five minutes and limits every Senator to one speech of five minutes upon each question.

My object was simply to make that bill a special order, because it is very important as a question of time, if the bill is to pass at all, that it pass at a very early day.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] considered that my proposition was in conflict with a notice that he had given, or rather with a reservation of a right that he had given notice of, to move that the Senate proceed to consider a certain bill, the Dakota bill, which he had reported. My motion was not in the slightest degree in conflict with the Senator's reservation. I simply proposed to make a special order. The Senator from Connecticut might have moved the next moment that the Senate proceed to consider the bill to which he referred.

I simply ask now that the Senate may make a special order for Wednesday at 2 o'clock of Order of Business 557, being House bill 2927.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., be made the special order for Wednesday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. DAWES. That is not debatable, but I think the Senate will indulge me in response to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. PLATT. It is debatable.

Mr. DAWES. I have not the slightest objection to fixing the special order, but I desire to set myself right with the Senator from Tennessee, with whom I should dislike as much as anybody I know in this world to have any difference.

It was not on Friday last that I did not feel the force of the Senator's new view of the best way to dispose of the Calendar. I did feel the full force of it. I anticipated it when the Senator served the notice on us a few days before that from that time forth he should insist upon the observance of the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. Within the morning hour.

Mr. DAWES. I anticipated that any change of views as to the best method of conducting business would come with such force that I should be obliged to yield to that also; and therefore I say now that I yield to this new view of disposing of business on the Calendar, which is to take up matters on it and make them special orders. Experience here will show that picking up bills out of the Calendar and making them special orders will be the best way to dispose of the whole Calendar. Every Senator who has been here any length of time will know that that is the best way to dispose of the Calendar, and therefore I yield again to the Senator's new view of this matter, assuring him that I will co-operate with him as fast as his views change and I can keep up with them, for the Calendar ought to be disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. We are acting now upon an order agreed to by unanimous consent, to proceed to the Calendar under a certain rule, and I hope the Chair will enforce the agreement.

Mr. PLATT. If in order at this time, I should like to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the admission of South Dakota, and I should like to make a statement before submitting that motion.

Last Tuesday I supposed it was understood by the Senate that that motion should prevail, and then that the bill should be laid aside informally for the execution of the order of the Senate for two days with reference to the Calendar. I shall be entirely willing that that course shall be pursued if the bill shall be taken up at this time. I think it is a matter of such importance that it ought to be taken up, so that it will remain as the unfinished business and have the right of way when the Calendar is concluded. I make that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I had made a motion that preceded it, but I suggest to my friend from Connecticut that I will withdraw my motion, and I ask him not to press his at present, and let us go on with the execution of the consent order, and at the end of the two days I will renew my motion to make a special order. He can make his motion, of course, whenever he chooses, but let us not consume the time of the Senate this morning in any discussion or consideration of these questions.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to withdrawing my motion, except that during these two days, when I shall not be in the Senate perhaps, I do not want some other matter to get precedence of the bill for the admission of South Dakota. In the hope that that may not be done in my absence I withdraw the motion, and shall allow the Calendar to proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] gave notice two or three days ago that he would call up a certain matter with a view of submitting some remarks this morning. I appeal to the Senator, as to-day and to-morrow have been by unanimous consent given over to the consideration of the Calendar, to forego his intention to make remarks this morning and postpone them until Wednesday morning.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I shall yield to that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business that order is closed, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII, in pursuance of the agreement made on Wednesday last. The consideration of the Calendar under this rule will continue for two consecutive days. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

GEORGE W. BOLTON, ALIAS CHARLES W. ANDREWS.

The bill (S. 547) for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles Andrews, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment in line 5, by changing the name "Charles Andrews" to "Charles W. Andrews;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews, late a private in Company B, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of the date when his said regiment was mustered out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews.

ORIN R. M'DANIEL.

The bill (S. 768) for the relief of Orin R. McDaniel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Orin R. McDaniel, late an enrolled soldier of Company H, Sixty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, upon the records of that company as enrolled December 26, 1863, and discharged February 14, 1864, for disability, and for granting him an honorable discharge accordingly, as of date February 14, 1864, for disability.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESERTION IN TIME OF PEACE.

The bill (S. 254) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, in line 7, after the word "desertion" to insert "in time of peace and not in the face of an enemy;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following words:

"No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion in time of peace and not in the face of an enemy, committed two years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he shall meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation: Provided, That said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which said person enlisted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFENSES AGAINT POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to make a report at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report, if there be no objection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, to report it with an amendment. I ask that the amendment may be read and adopted. I understand it is a very important matter to the Department that the bill should be passed promptly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. CALL. I object.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say to the Senator that it is a very important bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware can only proceed by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is to correct an abuse of the mails by persons who desire to use them for purposes of their own. They inclose an envelope to a person against whom they have a claim. He is informed of their demand, and on an envelope of that character the words are sometimes marked "bad debt." Some of the persons thus addressed may not owe the money, and persons who owe money and are unable to pay are exposed to the public gaze as bad debtors. It is to correct abuses of that kind that the bill is offered. I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. HALE. How does the committee propose to reach the difficulty and remedy it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. By amending the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has gone to the Calendar. The next bill in order will be stated.

The bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Miss Juliet G. Howe was announced as next in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Was there objection to the consideration of the bill I reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Florida both objected.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the objection so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand it is important in matter of time, and I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has already passed from the consideration of the Senate and has gone to the Calendar, and the Senate is engaged in the consideration of other business, pending which the Senator from Delaware moves——

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the Senator from Delaware to object to the consideration of Senate bill 300?

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill of the Senator from Delaware be restored to its place on the Calendar and taken up in order after Senate bill 300 is disposed of.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the bill pending will be disposed of, and then there will be no objection to the bill proposed by the Senator from Delaware being considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending bill will be reported.

JULIET G. HOWE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Miss Juliet G. Howe, the pending amendment being, in line 6, to strike out "Miss" and insert "Mrs;" so as to read, "Mrs. Juliet G. Howe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was also moved, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

And pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope that amendment will not prevail. The amount of $25 has been reported by the Pension Committee. It is in accordance with our rule to pension a hospital nurse at $25. This is a particularly and specially meritorious case, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire whether the amendment which has been read is the report of the Pension Committee?

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir; the bill was reported at $25 per month by a unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. The committee report in favor of $25 per month?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. This is an individual amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes; and the case is especially meritorious.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ascertain the state of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be stated again. It is not understood on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair finds that the proposed amendment was offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "12;" so as to read:

And pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was previously under consideration, and went over under objection. The question is on the amendment just read.

Mr. HAMPTON. I suggest that the bill be passed over informally until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] returns. I will say in addition that the question of pensioning all these nurses is now before the Military Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless formal objection be made to the consideration of the bill, the question must be taken on the amendment. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, on which a division has been called for.

The amendment was rejected, there being, on a division—ayes 16, noes 26.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe."

GEORGE PARK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George Park, dependent father of William C. Park, Company H, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS January 10, 1888, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of George Park, praying for a pension, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner, George Park, alleges that his two sons, H. L. Park and William C. Park, both minors, enlisted in Company H, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers. H. L. Park, the eldest, was killed in the battle of North Anna River, June 24, 1864, aged nineteen years. William C. Park was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness; returned to his regiment from hospital; was taken prisoner at the springing of the mine at Petersburgh, and sent to the prison at Danville, N. C., where he died January 6, 1865, aged eighteen years.

The mother is drawing a pension on account of the death of the eldest son, and the petitioner is advised that he can not be allowed a pension under existing laws because the mother is receiving a pension on account of the death of one of their deceased sons.

Petitioner is seventy-three years old; is unable to support himself without outside help; is troubled with varicose veins in his limbs and rheumatism in his shoulder-joints. The Commissioner of Pensions writes to the chairman of this committee in regard to this case:

"The parents had two sons, who were killed or died in the service. Unless the parents are living apart or at variance, the father can not be pensioned under the laws as they now exist."

F. Wessen deposes, August 22, 1866, that William C. Park worked for him for the last two years previous to enlistment, and that deponent paid his wages to the petitioner, amounting to about $40 a month.

October 13, 1866, said Wessen and one F. F. Hopkins made a joint affidavit, Wessen deposing that he employed William C. Park from July, 1860, to December, 1863, at which time he enlisted, and that he, Wessen, paid the father the son's wages, at the rate of $25 to $30 a month, the father being in delicate health and nearly dependent on the earnings of his son for support of his family of wife and four children.

Hopkins deposes that he has known the father and family four years, and that the above statement is true in all respects.

Both deponents also state that the soldier left surviving one sister (Theresa), whose age on January 3, 1866, was five years.

This claim was rejected by the following indorsement:

"May 13, 1867. Rejected. The mother alive."

In view of all the facts in this case, your committee recommend the passage of the bill which is herewith submitted.

Mr. COCKRELL. As far as I am concerned, I make no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFENSES AGAINST POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The bill which I reported from the Post-Office Committee, and which I understood was to come up immediately after the passage of the bill last considered, I move be now taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from Delaware asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned.

The bill was read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be read and adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

And all matter otherwise mailable by law, upon the envelope, or outside cover or wrapper of which, or postal-card, upon which indecent, lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, or threatening delineations, epithets, terms, or language, or reflecting injuriously upon the character or conduct of another may be written or printed, are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mail, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier, and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery anything declared by this section to be non-mailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same or cause the same to be taken from the mail for the purpose of circulating, or disposing of, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each and every offense be fined not less than $100, nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one year nor more than ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. PLATT. How does this get in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. PLATT. This is not a bill in regular order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was reported this morning and its consideration suspended, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] asked unanimous consent to have it considered at this time.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me it is too important a bill to be acted on now.

Mr. HOAR. I think that was misunderstood. I do not suppose anybody who had given unanimous consent to going on with the Calendar at this time expected that we should take up that important measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the matter to the Senate. The Senator from Delaware made the motion and no objection whatever was made. The Senator from Delaware moves to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I made the statement——

Mr. SHERMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent, because we are now acting under a special order that sets apart two days for the consideration of a certain class of bills in their order. If Senators want to break this up it is very easy to do it. If one bill of this kind gets in, that is the end of the order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I find there is objection, I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn, and the consideration of the Calendar will proceed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF ROBERT J. BAUGNESS.

The bill (S. 1063) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Robert J. Baugness, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of War to correct the record of Robert J. Baugness, late a private in Company I, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, so as to remove the charge of desertion; and to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the heirs or legal representative of Baugness the bounty and allowances that would have been due him had not such charge of desertion appeared against him on the rolls.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The bill (S. 495) for the relief of Albert H. Emery was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOAR. I think that bill had better stand over, if the Senate will consent, without losing its place on the Calendar under this rule. There is a similar bill pending in the other House, and my opinion is that it would be better to await the action of the House on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection to that course.

SARAH E. E. PERINE.

The bill (S. 396) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction and hear the case of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased, against the United States, on application of the claimant, if made within six months, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the increased cost of the construction of the iron-clad monitor Naubuc and the iron tug-boats Maria and Triana, and which increased cost was caused by delays occasioned in such construction by the acts of the Government, or its duly authorized officers or agents, beyond the periods specified in the contracts for the construction and completion of the steam iron-clad batteries. The court is to give judgment for such increased cost, if any, as shall be established by the evidence, any statutes of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding; but such recovery, if any, is to be limited to the increased cost which shall be shown to have resulted from delays caused by the Government, or its duly authorized officers and agents, in fulfilling the original contracts and alterations or modifications of the plans, and which increased cost could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe it will be necessary to read the report. This bill has passed the Senate two or three times. It is one of those cases where ironclads were built under a contract whereby the Navy Department might order such changes and additional work as it saw fit. It has been recommended by a commission of the Navy Department and has passed the Senate three or four times. I do not think anybody will care about having the report read, as the case is very familiar to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I do not insist on the reading of the report; but I want to say that I do not think there is the slightest claim against the Government in this case. This case is thirty or forty years old.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; it only arose during the war.

Mr. PLATT. Thirty years now, nearly. I simply say that this is a claim which has been before Congress in one way or another since the early period of the war. The claim has been the subject at one time and another of a good deal of scandal, and has been the subject of several reports. I do not believe that it is a claim which ought to be considered by Congress, to say the least. Latterly, within the past session or two, the claimants have adopted a different plan, and have asked to go to the Court of Claims. I do not know that I have any objection to their going to the Court of Claims unless the bill concludes the Government in the matter of recovery in some way. As has been suggested, there has been so much noise and confusion while this bill was being read that I was utterly unable to determine whether the bill concluded the Government on any point or not. If the bill can be read again and we can have sufficient order in the Senate so that I can understand it, perhaps I shall have no objection to the parties going to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the bill be read again. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. As that report will consume half or three-quarters of an hour, had not the bill better be passed over?

Mr. EVARTS. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the last page of this report, which contains the conclusions of the committee, would satisfy him of the public merits and propriety of the measure.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have the report here. I did not call for the reading of the report. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] called for it.

Mr. EVARTS. The last page will show the conclusions of the committee on the situation of this claim.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well, that will do.

Mr. HOAR. I think, if the Senator from New Jersey will permit me to state to him my understanding before the report is read, he will catch the points in the report perhap a little more understandingly, and he can then have it read in full or in part, as he prefers.

Mr. McPHERSON. Perhaps it will be totally unnecessary to read the report if the Senator from Massachusetts will give an explanation of the case; but before he explains it I desire to ask a question.

I know there were very many naval vessels, so called, which were constructed during the war, in the construction of which delays were made necessary by reason of changes of plan, and also by the impossibility of obtaining materials at the proper time of a proper character to be put into the vessels; but I do know that there was settlement made in most cases between the parties and the Government, that they receipted in full for all debts and demands of every nature and character, and took a sum of money awarded them by the Government, and that afterwards some of the cases were opened and a new board of investigation was ordered, and a new award was made and another receipt was given. In short, the Government settled twice and secured a receipt twice for all debts and demands due by the Government; and now if this is one of the cases that stands in that position, and it is proposed to send it to the Court of Claims for another adjudication after thirty years have elapsed, it seems to me the bill is not proper. There ought to be some time in the history of these cases when they shall be considered closed.

Mr. HOAR. I have never heard of any second receipt given by this party. I do not think there was anything of that kind in this case.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know of cases in which a second receipt was given.

Mr. HOAR. No such fact appears in this case. It must apply to some other case. It is not true in this case, so far as I am informed at least. There are some six or seven cases like this, of which two or three bills providing for relief have become laws, providing relief directly to the claimants. One was the case of Chouteau & Co. All stand alike and all stand on this same statement of facts in substance.

The Navy Department made contracts early in the war for the construction of what they called iron batteries and iron-clad vessels for war purposes, and it was reserved in the contract, the invention being entirely new in naval construction, that the Government should have the right to vary the contract in any respect as it should see fit, and the contractor thereupon should proceed to execute the work according to the new requirement of the Government, and that if he did not do it the Government should have the right to take the vessel as it stood, with all his work, and execute the rest itself. In other words, it was, as I said in stating the Chouteau case in the Senate, very much as if a builder who had contracted to build a cottage for the Senator from New Jersey at Newport should be liable by his contract to enter into obligation to build a mansion in New York—a distinct class of building. There were the most repeated and important changes, varying the character of the whole work. The Secretary of the Navy in one of his reports said that the United States had spent millions of dollars for changes in the ironclads.

It followed that a contract which could have been completed by the contractors within six to nine months, and which was required by its terms to be so completed, did not in fact get completed, and could not be completed under the new demands of the Government, for two or three years. In the mean time labor and iron and other materials, owing to the change of the value of our currency, had become three times as costly as when the contract was made.

These contractors had three classes of claims. First, they were entitled to their claim under the original contract for what they executed in pursuance of that. Next, they were entitled to extras occasioned by the variations which the Government made in the contract in accordance with the reserved right as it went on. Third, in the execution of their original contract they had a claim by reason of the delay caused by the Government in postponing for two or three years the execution of a contract which was to be completed in a few months, less than one year. They were put to a great increase of cost of material and labor in the execution of so much of the work as was within the original contract.

Mr. McPHERSON. What is the amount?

Mr. HOAR. Some hundreds of thousands of dollars. I think the contracts rise to as much as $395,000 in some cases.

When the work was done these people came to the Navy Department for their pay, and the Navy Department had a question about the authority of the Secretary to pay. They ordered a board, of which Mr. Cragin, formerly a Senator of the United States from New Hampshire, was a member, and some other gentlemen of high character, naval officers; I have forgotten their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to complete my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the liberty to complete his statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. The Government, however, had made a payment under circumstances which I have stated, under the original contract. The board recommended a payment of a very large sum in satisfaction of the claims of the contractors, that were well founded, holding that they were entitled to a large additional sum. Thereupon they were permitted to go to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims held, and the Supreme Court of the United States also held in one of the cases, that while they were entitled to recover what was provided in the original contract as the original cost and extras, there was no authority to allow them for the increase in the cost of the original work by reason of the higher price of labor and material caused by the Government prolonging the time. This bill is to allow this party to go to the Court of Claims and recover that additional sum.

In several of these cases—I am not certain whether in this one or not—there was a further question; and that was whether the original payment which had been made to the parties operated as a receipt in full. That came up in the Chouteau case; but whether in this case or not, I can not tell without looking at the papers.

The contractors gave a receipt which the Supreme Court held operated as a receipt in full; but it was the ordinary case where the parties authorized a banker or business agent in New York to collect the payments as they became due; and when they collected the final one on the completion of the work they gave the form of receipt required, but there is abundant evidence that the naval officer under whose direction the receipt was given told the agent of these parties that that would not in fact operate to cut them off from claiming for the extra work, and that the agent of these parties protested that it should not cut them off. Under these circumstances the committee held that these parties should be at liberty to go again to the Court of Claims to establish, if they could, their claim, the obligation of the Government by reason of this increased cost of the work which I have stated, and that the receipt should not conclude their right.

Now, the Senator from Connecticut understands that this is a claim which has given rise to some difficulty, or scandal as he expressed it. I have only to say that I have been upon the Committee on Claims for the last five or six years, and we have reported this claim once or twice and the other claims which became laws, but they have always been explained to the Senate, or several times have been explained to the Senate, and unless I am altogether at fault in my memory no human being has ever suggested an objection to the justice and equity of these claims. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will remember about the Chouteau case, which came from his State, and I think on the explanation which was made these cases have always passed the Senate without objection. Certainly I have never heard from any quarter of any objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. Has any case ever passed except the Chouteau case?

Mr. HOAR. There are two cases; I have forgotten the names of them now.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know there are some ten or twelve of them altogether, fully as many as that, which have been before the Committee on Naval Affairs for the last ten or twelve years, and in no case has one of them been reported favorably. I have some information somewhere, I think, perhaps in the committee-room of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that will give me the facts touching all these claims, and included among them are several in which there has been a second settlement and a second receipt given. I should like to have this bill go over until to-morrow, to retain its place on the Calendar, in order that I may investigate and see exactly what the status is.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that course, and I further desire to say that any Senator who knows of any fact bearing upon these matters that has not come to the knowledge of the Committee on Claims is a public benefactor and a benefactor of that committee when he discloses it. Of course, sometimes, with the utmost diligence, the committee may make a mistake. This matter has been fully known to the Navy Department always, and never has been brought to the attention of the committee except in the way I have stated. All we do is to send the claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Court of Claims makes an award to meet the demands of the petitioners in these bills, as near as I can now remember, it will take several million dollars to pay all the claims, and in every case they have receipted to the Government in full for all debts and demands due them, and twenty-five years have already elapsed; and during that period of time there has not been a single session of Congress that they have not been here asking relief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the bill go over until to-morrow, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. EVARTS. I merely wish to make a single observation. I have no objection to its going over.

The persons relieved here represent Mr. Perine, a very reputable shipbuilder in the city of New York, a man in regard to whose character no suspicion has ever been raised. He came into this duty and service for the Government and put his whole fortune into it. He was bankrupted by it. All that he has left to his estate, represented by his widow, is what this Government, under the limitations of this allowance by the Court of Claims, if it shall be approved by the Senate and House, may grant. If there was any scandal in the matter, it was the scandal that his whole fortune was wasted in attempting to serve his country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). There being no objection to that course, the bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar. The next bill will be stated.

NATHANIEL M'KAY AND DONALD M'KAY'S EXECUTORS.

The bill (S. 4) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOAR. That bill is one of the same class.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill goes over also under the same order.

WILLIAM B. GROFF.

The bill (S. 178) for the relief of William B. Groff, of Newport, R. I., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William B. Groff, of Newport, R. I., of $25 for damages sustained by his sail-boat Doctor, through collision with the United States tug Cohasset, in Newport Harbor, July 4, 1881.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. G. HUSTON & CO.

The bill (S. 309) for the relief of R. G. Huston & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to R. G. Huston and John B. Neely, partners as R. G. Huston & Co., $7,572.48, for replacing earth and material washed away from the levees from Milton to Raleigh, in the State of Louisiana, by the extraordinary floods of February, 1883, the same being in full payment for all extra work done by them in connection with their contract with the United States under date of October 3, 1882.

Mr. CALL. I should like the Senator reporting that bill to explain it.

Mr. SPOONER. The report is somewhat lengthy, but I can state in a moment what the facts of the case are.

These claimants entered into a contract with the Government for the construction of the works at Raleigh, Wilton, and other levees on the Mississippi River in 1882.

Under the specifications of the contract the contractors were responsible for damages by freshets and floods, but in drawing up the specifications no extraordinary floods were contemplated, nor further damage than by ordinary high water, such as damage by waves and ripples.

The claimants submitted their proposal for the work on the 25th of September, 1882, and the contract was awarded them on the 23d day of October following. Notice of the approval of this contract was not sent until the 9th day of November, 1882, and did not reach them until the 24th of the same month. This delay in giving notice to the contractors of the approval of the contract prevented the commencement of their operations for at least six weeks. The report shows that—

Immediately upon receiving the notice, Messrs. R. G. Huston & Co. proceeded with the work, employing a large number of men and teams, and continued to prosecute it with diligence and energy and to the entire satisfaction of the Government engineers in charge. During the month of February, 1883, and while a portion of the work was yet unfinished, a sudden and very extraordinary rise of the Mississippi River took place, threatening the destruction of the completed and uncompleted work, whereupon the Government engineer in charge directed Messrs. Huston & Co. to erect certain protection levees, intended to secure not only the uncompleted work but especially the Government work which had been already completed and paid for, which they immediately did, and for that purpose necessarily drew off their force from the levee then in process of construction by them. While the contractors were engaged in erecting the protection levees the river rose so rapidly as to sweep away portions of the protection levee and also of the main levee, which had not been completed, and for the portion of the main levee so swept away, and which the contractors were compelled to rebuild, they asked payment at the same rate as for the rest of the work.

It is stated by Colonel Marshall that the quantity of material which the contractors were thus obliged to replace, and which was not paid for, amounted to 31,552 cubic yards, amounting to $7,572.48. Colonel Marshall says:

The contractors did everything in their power to prevent loss by floods, working a large force by day and night. The damage could not have been foreseen or provided against, and in my opinion they can not equitably be held responsible for this loss.

The flood was almost unprecedented. Colonel Marshall further says:

I have no hesitation in advising the justice of payment for the first item, $7,572.48.

The Second Comptroller of the Treasury, considering the matter, said:

If not restricted by the express terms of the contract, I should deem that the circumstances afforded strong reasons for allowing for the work so nearly completed, and I think it to be regretted that the interests of the contractors were not more carefully guarded in preparing the contract.

This claim was considered carefully by Senator Jackson, as a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims, but was reported by him to the full committee before his resignation. He returned the bill and accompanying papers to the committee-room, with a draught of report on the case, which coincides with the recommendation of the committee.

It is asking too much of these claimants to ask them to stand loss occasioned by such a flood under the circumstances.

There were some items in this claim which were disallowed, but the item for which the appropriation is proposed is that recommended by the Engineer Department, and is one to which the committee could see no just objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA M'GUIRE.

The bill (S. 102) for the relief of Lucinda McGuire was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Lucinda McGuire, of Memphis, Tenn., $10,260, in full compensation for the use of her premises, Nos. 195 and 197 Main street, in the city of Memphis, from March 24, 1863, until June 1, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES MURPHY.

The bill (S. 660) for the relief of Charles Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms the Secretary of the Treasury is to adjust and settle, on the principles of equity, the claims of Charles Murphy arising under his contract with the United States for the supply of material for the erection of the appraiser's stores at San Francisco, Cal., and the money necessary to pay the amount found due is appropriated, not exceeding $3,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

The consideration of the bill (S. 1227) authorizing the appointment of a superintendent of Indian schools and prescribing his duties was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, which was, at the beginning of section 3 to strike out "the said superintendent shall have power" and insert "it shall be the duty of said superintendent;" after the word "discharge," at the end of line 3, to insert "superintendents;" and in line 4, after the words "teachers and," to insert "any other person connected with such schools and;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of said superintendent, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to employ and discharge superintendents, teachers, and any other person connected with such schools, and to make such rules and regulations for the conduct of the schools as in his judgment the good of such schools may require. He shall embody in detail his doings under this section, with the reasons for his action in each case, in his annual report to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER ON MENOMONEE RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 358) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 4, line 9, after the word "President," to strike out "with the assent of the chiefs and headmen of said tribe;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the expenses of survey, appraisal, and sale thereof, which expenses shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States from the first proceeds of the sale of timber as hereinbefore provided that the residue of such proceeds shall be paid to or funded for the benefit of said tribe, in such manner as the President may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I offer another amendment, on the second page, in section 1, lines 14 and 15, to strike out the words in parentheses and insert in place thereof the words:

Which shall not be less than $4 per thousand feet, board measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. Section 1, line 14, after the word "lot," it is proposed to strike out the words in parentheses, as follows:

(Except as herein provided, which exception shall be stated in the appraisal.)

And insert in lieu thereof:

So as to read:

Such appraisal shall state the quality, quantity, and value of the pine timber growing or being on each lot (which shall not be less than $4 per thousand feet, board measure), and shall be returned at the land office at Menasha, Wis., and shall be subject to public inspection for at least sixty days before the day appointed for the sale of said timber as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the fifth section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 5 in the following words:

SEC. 5. That this act shall be and remain inoperative until full and satisfactory evidence shall have been placed on the files of the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the sales of timber herein authorized have the sanction of the tribe, evidenced by orders or agreement taken in full council.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of that last amendment?

Mr. DAWES. It was once thought best by the committee that it should be left to the Indians to say what disposition should be made of the timber on their land. It is thought that it would be better to have that done by the discretion of the President and the Secretary of the Interior.

The title of these Indians to this land is very peculiar. It is perhaps worth while to call attention to it. I do not know that I have ever noticed such a title anywhere. They had a large tract of land in Wisconsin which they ceded to the United States, and the United States in exchange ceded them this land. My eye does not fall on the words at this moment, but they are these, "to be held by such title as Indian lands are held." That was the treaty. Then they made another treaty in which they distinctly subjected themselves, in the management of their whole reservation, to the President of the United States. After having taken a title which is such as Indians usually hold, they then agreed to submit the whole management to the President of the United States, and that renders it unnecessary to do anything but what Congress and the President shall deem wise.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to know from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether the Indians are satisfied with the proposed arrangement.

Mr. DAWES. The Indians are desirous of disposing of this timber. It is very important, in the opinion of everybody, that it should be disposed of. The chiefs of the tribe, however, desire to manage their own affairs, and have the money put into their hands. It is not thought to be wise that it should be done so; but this bill provides that it shall be put in the Treasury to be disposed of for their benefit under the direction of the President and the Secretary of the Interior. That is the only difference. I think the Indians as a body approve of this, but the chiefs of the tribe cling to the old idea of managing the affairs themselves.

Mr. CALL. I ask also whether the bill authorizes establishments to be set up for the manufacture of lumber?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is satisfactorily provided for.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. JAMES C. DUANE.

The bill (S. 45) for the relief of Col. James C. Duane, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $648 to reimburse Col. James C. Duane, brevet brigadier-general, for losses incurred in his office as engineer of the third light-house district through the forgeries committed by a clerk in his office, Henry J. Buete (who has fled the country), in raising his official checks to amounts greater than those for which they were drawn and signed, between the 1st day of January and the 23d day of June, 1879, without any negligence or fault on the part of the said Colonel Duane.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF PETER DELLA TORRE.

The bill (S. 498) for the relief of Frank Della Torre and Susan F. Della Torre, heirs of Peter Della Torre, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that and the succeeding bill. We can not discuss them under the five-minute rule.

Mr. STEWART. I think we can dispose of the Della Torre bill and the other one, too. I hope the Senator will not object to the Della Torre bill. If I am given one moment, I think I can satisfy the Senate as to the facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, being objected to, goes over.

Mr. COCKRELL. One bill proposes to pay the heirs of a United States district attorney in California for services in 1856 and 1857, $50,000, an absolute payment of $50,000 for extraordinary services for doing his duty. We can not discuss that within the limit of five minutes.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the proposition in the committee's amendment. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be read and let me say one word, and then he can object if he chooses?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me understand. Here is Senate bill 498 reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] "without amendment," proposing to give $50,000.

Mr. STEWART. No; "with an amendment."

Mr. COCKRELL. "Without amendment," the print before me says.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to show what we have on our Calendar. We have Senate bill 498 reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] "without amendment."

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will pause. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator from Missouri——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a word?

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Missouri give me his attention?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. When I make an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can not be allowed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I object.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Missouri allow the amendment proposed by the committee to be read? I do not like to have the bill denounced in this way.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Chair had permitted me to make an explanation, I should have made it; but if I can not make it, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is bound to enforce the rule.

Mr. STEWART. The committee has reported an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRIS. If the bill is objected to, I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks for the regular order. The next order of business will be stated.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it is fair in objecting to a bill to make an erroneous statement without knowing the facts of the case. If the Senator objects, we have to submit to that under the rule; but I object to an argument being made when it can not be replied to. I ask that the amendment reported by the committee be read. This bill does not propose to pay $50,000. It proposes to refer the matter to the Department of Justice to ascertain the amount due, not exceeding $10,000, not for services as district attorney, but for services outside of his office, which he performed at the request of the Attorney-General, and which the Attorney-General said he ought to be paid for. Both Attorneys-General Stanton and Black said he ought to be paid a much larger sum than is provided in this bill, for it is limited to $10,000. I think it is fair to allow the amendment of the committee to be read before objection is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Order of Business No. 62, being the bill (S. 670) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MANDERSON. What has become of Order of Business No. 60?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was objected to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not understand that there was any objection to Order of Business No. 60.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri——

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not entered any objection to what has not been called.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that it be reported. It is next in order.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business No. 59 may be gone through with. I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] was perhaps laboring under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri stated that he objected to Orders of Business 59 and 60, and under that objection the Chair announced that they were passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. My Calendar shows, as my red mark on the Calendar before me indicates, "Order of Business 59." I did not intend to object to Order of Business 60. Let that be called.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Missouri object to Order of Business 59?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have objected to it, and shall object to it until I can get the floor. When I can get the floor I will give my reasons.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that Order of Business No. 60 be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

W. L. PARVIN AND H. A. GREENE.

Order of Business No. 60, being the bill (S. 180) for the relief of Washington L. Parvin and Henry A. Greene, was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to make it the duty of the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to examine and determine the amounts justly due Washington L. Parvin for expenses incurred by him in recruiting, transporting, and subsisting Company F, First Regiment California Infantry Volunteers, in the year 1861, in the State of California; also what is justly due Henry A. Greene for expenses incurred by him in recruiting, transporting, and subsisting Company G, First Regiment California Infantry Volunteers, in the year 1861, in the State of California; but in no case shall the amount allowed thereon to Parvin exceed $991.10, nor shall the amount allowed to Greene exceed $3,303; and the sums so found to be due shall be paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. When Order of Business No. 59 was called upon the Calendar, Senate bill 498, Report No. 33, I had on my original file of papers that bill "introduced by Mr. PLATT December 12, 1887," and "reported by Mr. STEWART without amendment" on January 12, 1888. That bill as reported without amendment proposed to pay to the heirs $50,000. On turning over I found "Calendar No. 59, Senate bill 498, Report No. 33, reported January 12, 1888, by Mr. STEWART with an amendment" striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the parts printed in italics. Both bills appear to have been reported on the same day, one of them without amendment and one of them to strike out all of it and insert.

Mr. STEWART. That is a mistake. I only made one report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am entitled to the floor. These are the bills themselves here before me. I am not responsible for the mistake that the printer may have made. I supposed they were printed right, and that the bills as printed and laid before us were correct, and therefore I said that here were two bills, and here they are, one to pay $50,000 and another to pay $10,000.

Now, as I understand the Senator from Nevada, the first bill was not intended to be reported without amendment, and the second bill was intended to be reported with a substitute proposing to pay $10,000, or, rather, to authorize the Attorney-General to do it. That is a very different case from the $50,000 case, and if both bills were here, one to pay $50,000 and the other to pay $10,000, I should insist on my objection. At the proper time I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the bill before the Senate (S. 180) for the relief of Washington L. Parvin and Henry A. Greene be acted on.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF PETER DELLA TORRE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now withdraw my objection to the bill that proposes to allow $10,000.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 498) for the relief of Frank Della Torre and Susan F. Della Torre, heirs of Peter Della Torre, deceased.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Attorney-General be, and is hereby, authorized and required to examine the claim of Frank Della Torre and Susan F. Della Torre, heirs of Peter Della Torre, deceased, for extraordinary services rendered by said Peter Della Torre during the years 1857, 1858, and 1859, while United States district attorney for the State of California, in defending the title of the United States to public lands in said State against fraudulent claims under pretended Mexican grants, and allow to the heirs of said Peter Della Torre what said extraordinary services were reasonably worth, not exceeding the sum of $10,000; and whatever sum shall be found due on such examination shall be paid to said heirs out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STEWART. Let me say a word, in explanation, as the report is somewhat long.

Mr. Della Torre was district attorney during most of the time when the board of land commissioners was in operation in California. It was not his duty to appear before that board. The Attorney-General, Mr. Black, asked him to attend to the Government interests. A large number of fraudulent claims were presented. He was a very intelligent and competent man, one of the best officers we ever had on the Pacific Coast. He understood the Spanish language, and was peculiarly fitted for the duty. He undertook to perform this service and worked about three years at it thoroughly. The Attorney-General did not pay him at the time, giving as an excuse therefor that he did not think he had authority to pay it out of the contingent fund, or that the contingent fund was pretty nearly exhausted.

Mr. Stanton also had correspondence with him, as the report shows, and as the record shows, and fully understood the case. I will read a very short letter from Mr. Stanton, which will show his view of the case:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY, January 23, 1867.

DEAR MADAM: Your recent note was duly received. Mr. Bidwell informs me that he has received and filed with the committee a statement of the cases conducted by Colonel Della Torre. I have made an application to the committee to permit me to appear before them and give my testimony in relation to the valuable services of the colonel and the justice of his claim. I shall do all in my power to bring the case to a favorable and speedy termination, and shall not cease in my interest and anxiety for the welfare of yourself and your children.

With sincere regard, I am ever, truly yours,

EDWIN M. STANTON.

MRS. DELLA TORRE.

I need not go into the previous correspondence; it is too lengthy. The bill that was introduced proposed $50,000. The committee were unable to estimate the value of these services satisfactorily, or to give such explanation as would be likely to secure the passage of the bill. The services at that time of attorneys in California were extremely high. We thought that a bill for a larger amount would be delayed, as it has been already delayed for a generation; and rating it at $10,000, which would be less than $5,000 a year for the work done, and leaving it to the Department of Justice to determine what he shall have, not exceeding $10,000, so as to give some compensation for his services, we thought would be likely to receive the approbation of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EFFICIENCY OF INFANTRY BRANCH OF ARMY.

The bill (S. 670) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that that will lead to discussion. It had better retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope that may be done. I presume it can not be considered under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar, being passed over.

ROBERT H. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (S. 939) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Robert H. Montgomery, captain in the Fifth Regiment of Cavalry, shall be entitled to credit, for all purposes of pay and allowances, for the period of time from the 19th of November, 1863, to the 16th of February, 1865, during which time he was a prisoner of war in the hands of the enemy, the same as though he had actually been in the military service as a second lieutenant of cavalry during that period.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT PEMBINA MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1003) granting the right of way to the Duluth and Manitoba Railroad Company across the Fort Pembina military reservation, in Dakota Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN DENVER.

The bill (S. 1157) to correct an error in the description of certain lands entered and patented to the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, by authority of an act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. That bill may be indefinitely postponed, the House having passed a bill of similar import, and I shall ask the consideration of the House bill.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

MRS. HETTIE K. PAINTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 434) granting a pension to Mrs. Hettie K. Painter. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Hettie K. Painter, a volunteer nurse during the late war, at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSITORS OF FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1138) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that will lead to discussion. It had better retain its place on the Calendar. It is a very important bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill has passed the Senate at least once, when the attention of the Senate was called to it and the facts stated. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the Comptroller of the Currency, who is also ex officio the manager of this fund. I think it is simply an act of justice. I do not think there is any disputed fact connected with it. The whole thing is in the hands of the Government. The Government—I think unwisely; I have always thought it was done unwisely—chartered a corporation under the name of the Freedman's Bank. The persons having charge of the bank, which was looked upon as a kind of Government institution, collected from the freedmen in various parts of the United States large sums of money, which were there deposited. The money was wasted by the managers of the bank, who were, many of them, persons in responsible positions, largely on account of bad investments, making insecure loans, and the like, so that it requires a million dollars to make good the deficiency to the depositors without interest. The matter has been pending here for several years, and finally the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency recommended that these ignorant and poor depositors be reimbursed from the Treasury by the Government. It is an act of charity of the highest kind. Nearly all these people lived in the South—all of them, I believe—and they are colored people from almost every city in the South.

I think a general public sentiment throughout those States, so far as I have heard, favors the passage of this bill, and we have had some resolutions in favor of it from public bodies, recommending the appropriation of this sum of money. Any Senator can decide for it or against it on a moment's consideration. All I wish is to have a vote. If I remember aright, the Committee on Finance reported it unanimously, with the exception of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. At any rate, we all agreed that the money ought to be paid. That is all there is of it.

Mr. VEST. I have supported some such bill before, but I do not know that I shall do so now. There is one expression in this bill that in my judgment controls its entire operation, and that is the use of the words "legal representatives." If I believed this money would go to the poor depositors, the deceived and deluded negroes, no man would vote for it more readily; but in my judgment, from what I have seen in regard to claims of this class, I believe this money will not go to the negroes, but will go to the speculators, who have bought up the claims and are urging the bill to a passage.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will draw an amendment in stronger language than the bill employs against the misapplication of the money, I shall be glad to accept it. The Committee on Finance have expressly provided that no assignment shall be regarded as valid, and if you can express the idea of the words "legal representatives" in a more limited way than we have done, I shall be glad to accept the amendment.

I say now, to place it on the record, that the object of this bill is to reimburse the persons who trusted the Freedman's Bank, not any assignee, not any speculator, not any purchaser of claims; and if the language of the bill is not strong enough on that point, I should be glad to have the Senator take the bill and make it stronger, because I certainly would not pay to any assignee or any other persons except the depositor a single dollar.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that any language I could use would improve the bill; but I know very well that these claims have been purchased by claim agents in the city of Washington, who are urging that this bill should be passed as an act of justice on the part of the Government. We all know how these things go on. I have an impression in regard to where the money will go, and therefore I am opposed to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it will lead to debate, and I must therefore object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to its retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The objection I suppose carries it over.

Mr. EVARTS. If the Senator from Missouri who last addressed us will permit me to make a single observation, I suppose we should all feel that the benefit of this bill should go to those who suffered and their personal representatives, those who succeed them, and not to any agent. If the words "legal representatives" are thought to include possible assignees, the use of the words "personal representatives" would answer the purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. But there is an express clause in the bill excluding assignees.

Mr. VEST. As a lawyer I suppose the words "legal representatives" would include any assignee, any person who came with a power of attorney.

Mr. EVARTS. But "personal representatives" would not.

Mr. VEST. "Personal representatives" would not do it.

Mr. EVARTS. I move to substitute "personal," and then we can pass the bill.

Mr. VEST. I should vote for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Without losing its place on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill retains its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the proposed amendment of the Senator from New York will be noted, and I will look at it, to insert "personal representatives" instead of "legal representatives."

BESSIE S. GILMORE.

The bill (S. 352) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem certain United States 5 per cent. coupon bonds in favor of Bessie S. Gilmore, who claims to have been the owner thereof on September 14, 1876, at which time it is alleged they were stolen from her, and who further claims that they were afterward destroyed by the thief or thieves, upon Bessie S. Gilmore furnishing to the Treasury Department a bond of indemnity, with good and sufficient sureties, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to secure the United States against loss or damage in consequence of the redemption of the bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SHERMAN January 17, 1888:

The Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 352) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore, respectfully reports:

That it is clearly shown by the papers on file that Mrs. Bessie S. Gilmore was the owner of the bonds described in the bill, amounting to $2,000; that they were in her possession on board the Bremen steamer Neckar in September, 1876; that while on the voyage they were either lost or stolen and have never been recovered; that active efforts were made by the officers of the boat, by the police officers on the arrival of the steamer at Bremen, and by the German authorities to recover the bonds, without success; and that all the circumstances indicate that the bonds were destroyed to avoid detection. They were called in due course by the Treasury Department prior to July 1, 1881, but neither bonds nor coupons have been presented. Mrs. Gilmore applied to the Treasury Department for relief under existing law on or about June, 1880, and established to the satisfaction of the Comptroller her ownership of the bonds and their loss. The Comptroller adds:

"It does not sufficiently appear that these bonds, or any of them, are destroyed. Under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, sections 3702, 3703, and 3704, no relief in the present condition of the case can be granted to Mrs. Gilmore. Whenever the bonds have been outstanding a sufficient length of time it is probable that she may obtain relief from Congress."

More than four years having elapsed since the date of the Comptroller's report, and it appearing that neither bonds nor coupons have been presented for payment, and it being clearly established that the claimant has a right to the bonds and the proceeds, your committee is of the opinion that she is entitled to relief by the payment of the amount of the bonds and the coupons maturing to the date of the call, upon her furnishing to the Treasury Department a bond of indemnity in the usual form.

Your committee therefore recommends the passage of the bill with an amendment in the nature of a substitute more accurately describing the bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe it was in the Forty-fourth Congress that a case similar to this came before the Committee on Finance and was reported adversely. In that or the succeeding Congress a similar bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, of which I was then a member, and I made an adverse report on it. I think this is a very dangerous class of legislation. Coupon bonds may pass by delivery just as greenbacks do, and there are instances now on record in the Treasury Department where the loss or supposed destruction of bonds has been satisfactorily proved apparently, and the law now provides that where they are totally destroyed and the owners can make the proper proof before the Treasury Department they may get payment. I say that where proof has been made, yet the bonds have afterwards turned up and been presented to the Treasury Department. It opens a wide door for fraud and false swearing in every direction.

I am opposed to the principle involved in this bill. I do not think the United States should pay any of these bonds which have been lost, any more than they should pay for lost legal-tender notes. There is no obligation on the Government, and it is dangerous because proof can be made. It is easy to make proof that a person had certain bonds. The securities in the course of a few years will be scattered or dead, and the United States will have no recourse. The bonds may be presented twenty or thirty years hereafter. They may be laid aside purposely until all the securities have died. It opens a wide door for fraud.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill from the committee if the Treasury Department has been consulted in regard to the propriety of redeeming these bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. In this case not only does the Department recommend it, but the Comptroller at the time—I have forgotten who it was—six or seven years ago, thought the case came very nearly within the general law as it stood, but in this case the claimant was not able to show the actual destruction of the bonds by fire or the like, and the Comptroller thought that the lapse of time would show that they had been probably destroyed. This bill received the approval of the Treasury Department, and also passed the Senate at the last Congress.

I do not think with the Senator from Missouri that the Government of the United States ought to refuse to pay bonds when there is a moral certainty that they have been lost or destroyed. Any citizen of the United States might be compelled in any tribunal of the United States to pay these bonds if they were his, under the precise circumstances given here, and the United States ought not to shield itself behind the uncertain proof of the loss of these securities and avoid payment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Could not this party have gone into court after the bonds were called and sue for the money?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not?

Mr. SHERMAN. The law expressly forbids it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have never seen such a law. I should like the Senator to show it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this was against a private person—if these bonds were issued by the Senator from Missouri—the owner might sue him and make him pay them; but the Government can not be sued on a question of this kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the Court of Claims on any contract of the United States suit can be brought.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in this case. A suit can not be brought for bonds. There are dozens of cases of the kind. This is a case where a lady traveling with these bonds to pay her expenses, lost them in a steamer sixteen years ago—in 1871. They were five-twenties, and were subsequently called, and neither bonds nor coupons have ever been produced, and she has lost this money and been without it from that time to this. She has also lost the interest, as a matter of course, ever since the date of the call.

It seems to me that under the circumstances the Government of the United States ought to pay this money on its bonds that are lost, taking such security as may be reasonable, and the bill requires that before she can get the money she has to give ample security to the United States to pay back any damage that may be done to the United States by the payment of these bonds to her.

I believe but one case has ever occurred where bonds supposed to be lost under these circumstances were finally presented, but there it was very easy to recover upon the bond required by the Government before payment was made.

I think it is a clear case of equity and that we ought not to refuse to pay this money. All I wish is a vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend by inserting, in line 27, "double the amount of the face of said bonds."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection. She can give bond in five times the amount—any bond that is desired.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I move to insert, in line 27, after the words "a bond of indemnity," the words "in double the amount of the face of said bonds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 27, after the word "indemnity," it is proposed to insert—

In double the amount of the face of said bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will allow me to make a statement. It is provided that the bond of indemnity shall be double the amount of the face of the bonds lost. How much interest has accrued?

Mr. COCKRELL. Interest stopped when the bonds were called in.

Mr. SHERMAN. The calling in stopped the payment of coupons. The coupons may have been attached.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was very much astonished at the statement of the Senator from Ohio. I read section 1059 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 1059. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, and all claims which may be referred to it by either House of Congress.

There can be no question that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction, and if these bonds have been lost, it would be the tribunal in which to establish that fact, not by ex parte evidence, as in this case, but by competent legal testimony, subject to cross-examination. If the party was to go into the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims was to decide that it did not have jurisdiction, and Congress was the only hope of relief, it would be different. These bonds are due. If they are due they are like any other contract.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not able to turn to the statute, but I am sure there is no question about that. The law provides when these bonds may be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no authority to sue on a bond of the United States that has been lost or destroyed. In that respect the law is defective, because we have several times proposed to make a general law on the subject, and did pass a law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to act in certain cases where the proof of destruction of the bond was absolute and conclusive. In that case he can act, but in all other cases a bill must be presented to Congress. I can not turn at once to the law, but there is no doubt about it. We have had case after case pending before us.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the mere loss of the bond prevents the bring-ng of an action in the Court of Claims, then we should by a general law remove that objection and let the parties go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would be proper enough, perhaps.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall therefore be compelled for the present to object to this until such a bill as that can be prepared; and let us pass a general law and get these cases out of Congress. It is not the place for them.

Mr. SHERMAN. We pass such bills every session, and the Senator now denies justice to this poor woman who has waited sixteen years for her money. Congress will never pass such a law as he suggests. I would not vote for such a law, because I think cases of this kind should be brought to Congress unless the law specially provides some other way. It would not be safe.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, it is safe to trust Congress to pass a bill upon ex parte testimony of the claimants and their friends and relatives, and not safe to trust the Court of Claims for these same parties to go in and bring suit, and the United States with the Attorney-General and his assistants to appear there and cross-examine them and make them introduce competent legal testimony to establish the loss or destruction of a bond and the ownership of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds Senators that this debate is by unanimous consent. The consideration of the bill has been objected to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill retain its place on the Calendar for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

LANDS IN DENVER.

Mr. TELLER. I asked awhile ago to have Order of Business 65, being the bill (S. 1157) to correct an error in the description of certain lands entered and patented to the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, by authority of an act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, indefinitely postponed. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be placed back on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, if there be no objection, and the bill restored in its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. The desire of the Senator from Colorado is that the bill may be informally placed on the Calendar, subject to be called up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the order.

Mr. TELLER. I ask now that we take up Senate bill 1157, and substitute for it the House bill reported to-day by the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business 65, being the bill (S. 1157) to correct an error in the description of certain lands entered and patented to the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, by authority of an act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, having been passed over, the Senator from Colorado asks that the Senate now proceed to consider the same.

The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to substitute the House bill, which is in the hands of the Secretary, for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the House bill on the Calendar?

Mr. TELLER. No, sir; but it was reported this morning from the Committee on Public Lands. It is the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for cemetery purposes, reported with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that this bill be considered in lieu of Senate bill 1157?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider House bill 3300.

The preamble recites that at the second session of the Forty-second Congress an act approved May 21, 1872, entitled "An act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands in Colorado for a cemetery," erroneously describes a tract of land as the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1 and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 2 and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 2, township 4 south, range 68 west, sixth principal meridian; and that Denver City has paid for and received a patent for the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1 and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 2 and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 2, township 4 south, range 68 west, sixth principal meridian, which latter description is correct, and in accordance with the land actually occupied by the city for a cemetery. The bill therefore proposes that the act of May 21, 1872, shall be amended by striking out the words "the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter" and inserting in lieu thereof "the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter;" so that the description of the land shall read: "The northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1 and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 2 and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 2, township 4 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian."

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was in section 2, line 14, after the word "grounds," to strike out "and for such other legitimate and proper purposes;" so as to read:

That the said city of Denver be, and it is hereby, authorized to vacate the use of the said land, or any portion thereof, as a cemetery, and to appropriate and use the same or any part thereof for a public park or grounds, as the corporate authorities of the said city of Denver may hereafter determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I also offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

SEC. 3. That all selections of land as school indemnity in the State of Colorado may be made in quantities equal to the loss of school lands or deficiency therein, and anywhere in the land district in which the bases of selection are situated: Provided, That if non-mineral vacant public lands are not obtained for such indemnity in the district in which the bases are situated, the selections may be made in any land district in the State containing such lands and in subdivisions of 40 acres or more.

SEC. 4. That selections of the school indemnity heretofore made in the State of Colorado under the provisions of the seventh section of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved March 3, 1875, and sections 2275 and 2276 of the United States Revised Statutes, which have been suspended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office because not made in tracts of not more than one quarter-section, and as "contiguous as may be" to the bases of the same, as required by the said section of the said act of 1875, are hereby confirmed to the extent that they shall be found valid in all other respects, and it shall be the duty of the said Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior to cause them to be approved and certified as by law provided in other cases of school selections.

SEC. 5. That said State shall be allowed to select lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in patented private land claims and the Ute Indian reservations within said State of Colorado, comprehended in an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederate bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in the said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the Seretary of the Interior, without awaiting the extension of the public surveys, to ascertain and determine, by protraction or otherwise, the number of townships that will be included within the late Ute Indian reservation in the State of Colorado, and thereupon the State shall be entitled to select indemnity lands to the extent of two sections for each of said townships, for school purposes, in any land districts in the State: Provided, That said selections shall not be made within the boundaries of said reservation, and in subdivisions of not less than 160 acres.

SEC. 7. That upon a determination by the Interior Department that a portion of the smallest legal subdivision in a section numbered 16 or 36 in Colorado is mineral land, and that the United States was not divested of its title thereto in its entirety by the grant to the State for schools, the State shall be allowed to select indemnity for the entire section subdivision under the act entitled "An act to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands," and for other purposes, approved April 2, 1884, and thereupon the subdivisions mentioned, or such portions of them as remain after segregation of the mineral lands or claims, shall be treated as other public lands of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Colorado if that amendment is precisely the same bill that the Committee on Public Lands passed on favorably.

Mr. TELLER. It is verbatim. There is no change whatever in it. It has the unanimous approval of the committee, and the Senator himself looked at it with me.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill to enable the State of Colorado to select indemnity lands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 1157) to correct an error in the description of certain lands entered and patented to the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, by authority of an act of Congress approved May 21, 1872, will be indefinitely postponed.

BATTLE-GROUNDS IN MAUMEE VALLEY.

The bill (S. 354) to provide for the survey of certain historic grounds, locations, and military works was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to cause to be made, by an officer of the Engineer Corps, in co-operation with the Maumee Valley Monumental Association, an examination and inspection of each of the following-named historic grounds, locations, and military works:

The burial place on Put-in-Bay Island of the sailors of the Navy in the war of 1812.

Fort Industry, at the mouth of Swan Creek, on the Maumee River.

Fort Miami, on the north and west side of the Maumee River, 7 miles above Fort Industry.

Fort Meigs, and the burial grounds of the soldiers of the war of 1812, near the same, on the south and east bank of the Maumee River, 10 miles above the mouth of Swan Creek.

A suitable portion of the battle-field of Fallen Timber, on the north and west bank of the Maumee River, 4 miles above Fort Meigs, where Anthony Wayne defeated the allied Indian nations under Turkey Foot August 20, 1794.

Fort Defiance, at the confluence of the Auglaize and Maumee Rivers, erected by General Wayne in August, 1794.

Fort Wayne, at Fort Wayne, Ind., at the confluence of the St. Joe and St. Mary's Rivers, which was erected by General Wayne in October, 1794.

A survey and full report shall be made to Congress of the location, situation, and condition of the same, and the amount of grounds necessary for the proper protection and improvement of the works, forts, battle-fields, and burial places in and near the same, as well as the probable cost thereof. One hundred and fifty dollars is appropriated for the expense of the examination and inspection provided for.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT CORINTH, MISS.

The bill (S. 643) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $10,000 for the purpose of constructing a macadamized or gravel road, or a road partly of gravel and partly of stone, from the town of Corinth, Miss., to the national cemetery near that town, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY RECORD OF WILLIAM CLARK.

The bill (S. 1118) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Clark, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion standing against the record of William Clark, deceased, who was a private in Company K, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and who died in Andersonville prison on August 9, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN ST. LOUIS.

The bill (S. 280) donating to city of St. Louis, Mo., a certain strip of land for street purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms a strip of land 57½ feet in width, off the south end of the United States marine-hospital tract, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., to connect Second street with Marine avenue, the southern line of the strip being coincident with the southern line of the hospital tract, is donated to the city of St. Louis for street purposes; but whenever the city shall cease to use the strip for street purposes the title to the same shall revert to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY M. RECTOR.

The bill (S. 314) for the relief of Henry M. Rector was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Henry M. Rector of $399.91, being the amount standing to the credit of Rector on the books of the Treasury, as shown by page 162, Executive Document No. 363, first session Forty-ninth Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'GRATH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1512) granting an increase of pension to John McGrath. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John McGrath, late a private in Company D, Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLODGETT January 18, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition granting a pension to John McGrath, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner, who was a private in Company D, Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteers, enlisted August 26, 1862, was mustered in September 13 of the same year, and was discharged February 14, 1863. In his application for a pension, filed February 10, 1879, he claimed that in the fall and winter of 1862 he contracted a severe cold, which settled in his lungs, resulting in incipient consumption, which later became chronic. This claim he substantiated, and was pensioned from February 15, 1863, at $4 per month, and from March 3, 1880, at $8 per month. On April 11, 1880, he made application for an increase of pension, on the ground of increased disability. This was granted August 27, 1880, since which time he has received $16 per month. He now prays for further increase, alleging diseases of heart, kidneys, and liver, and claims to be totally incapacitated for labor.

The reports of the examining surgeons fully substantiate the claims of the petitioner, and after careful examination of other evidence, the committee feels justified in recommending favorable action on his petition and accompanying bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. So far as this report discloses, the last application for increase was in 1880. The Pension Office is very liberal in granting applications for increase of pensions by reason of increased disability; and if there has been no application since 1880 for an increase of the rate of pension allowed in this case by reason of increased disability, the case has no business in Congress. I object, therefore; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

WILLIAM TABB.

The bill (S. 741) for the relief of William Tabb was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for payment to William Tabb, of Spottsylvania County, near Fredericksburgh, Virginia, of $2,149.75, in full for supplies taken from him during the years 1863 and 1864 by and for the use of the United States troops.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEMON BACHE & CO.

The bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Semon Bache & Co., of New York, $3,562.56, for the purpose of refunding the duty paid by that firm upon glass from imported stock furnished to the National Museum and the New Orleans, Louisville, and Cincinnati expositions for exhibition cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator making the report if there was a deduction from the price charged the Government and paid for this glass of the amount of this tax? Did these parties receive full compensation for the glass with the tariff duty added?

Mr. HOAR. They did not, as I understand.

Mr. EVARTS. I can answer that question. It is a perfectly plain debt on the part of the United States, and it has never been disputed. The Government were in immediate need of the glass, and this importing house had the glass desired, which had paid duty. The United States never pays duty, and if it had ordered this glass it would have been imported free. This is the short price without the duty added, and the merchants having paid the Government the duty, it has come around so as to need an application in order to refund it. I can only regret that it can not be refunded with interest, because the importers are losing the interest for three or four years upon the intricacy, if it be that, in the repayment of the money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF STATES.

The bill (S. 1057) to settle and adjust the claims of any State for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 1, after the word "that," to strike out "the proper accounting officers" and insert "Secretary;" and in line 4, before the word "hereby," to strike out "they are" and insert "he is;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and report to Congress the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by any State for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, arming, equipping, supplying, paying, and transporting its troops, commissioned or enlisted, for the purpose of aiding to suppress the late insurrection against the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMASTER JAMES E. TOLFREE.

The bill (S. 868) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to James E. Tolfree, paymaster United States Navy, $4,000, in full for all losses of both Government and personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan, on the morning of February 8, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES BLAKE.

The bill (S. 882) for the relief of Pay Clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles Blake, pay clerk, United States Navy, $700, in full of all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan, on the morning of February 8, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY AND RETIREMENT OF MATES IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 744) relating to the pay and retirement of the mates in the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, line 5, before the word "officers," to strike out "thirty-seven" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to make the section read:

That the law regulating the pay and retirement of warrant officers in the Navy shall be construed to apply to the thirty-four officers serving as mates in the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should thank the Senator making this report to explain the necessity of this bill and the change it makes in the existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are now thirty-four mates in the Navy who are not entitled to retirement under the existing law. So they stand upon the active-list of the Navy. This bill simply provides that they may be retired with the pay of warrant officers—boatswains and carpenters.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the difference between the pay of warrant officers and the pay of mates?

Mr. CHANDLER. The pay of warrant officers is larger than the present pay of the mates.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why shall these men be retired on a higher pay than they now receive?

Mr. CHANDLER. They are a meritorious class of officers. They have all of them served faithfully. There can be no additional appointments. The position which they have occupied in the service is one entitling them, as is thought by those familiar with the service, to as favorable treatment as retired warrant officers receive. And therefore it was thought by the committee that these officers might judiciously and fairly be placed upon the retired-list upon as favorable terms as the warrant officers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should they not be on as favorable terms as the warrant officers who are retired as warrant officers if these men are retired as mates?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. The warrant officers are retired upon their rank and pay of warrant officers. Now you take these mates, and instead of retiring them as mates you give them a promotion. The next thing will be application by warrant officers to be retired on higher pay, one grade higher, and so it will go. If this was to retire them on the pay of the grade they held as mates, it would be placing them on an equality with the warrant officers, but it is placing them on a better footing than the warrant officers.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President, it is not placing them in any better position than the warrant officers. The retired pay of these mates will be precisely the same, if they are retired under this bill, as the pay of retired boatswains, and carpenters, and sailmakers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to this bill; but I ask that it retain its place on the Calendar until I can look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

FOURTH INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 29) authorizing the appointment of a delegate to the Fourth International Prison Congress, to meet at St. Petersburg, in the year 1890, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRITISH BARK CHANCE.

The bill (S. 1026) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of State to draw his requisition upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment of $16,000 to the duly accredited representative of the Government of Great Britain at Washington, to enable that government to pay the same to the owners of the British bark Chance, of the port of Sydney, New South Wales, to indemnify them, and the officers and crew of that bark, for abandoning their whaling voyage in the Arctic Ocean, in the month of September, 1871, and rescuing from shipwreck ninety-six American seamen and transporting them to Honolulu.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JABEZ BURCHARD.

The bill (S. 131) for the relief of Jabez Burchard was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 10, after the words "in the," to strike out "naval-pension fund" and insert "United States Treasury;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer on the retired-list of the United States Navy, an amount which, with payments heretofore made to him, will be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of the grade or rank held by him at the date of his retirement by a naval board of the United States Navy; said amount to be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to take effect from and after the date of his retirement by said naval board.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report in that case, or some explanation of the bill.

Mr. CAMERON. A similar bill to this has passed the Senate at four different Congresses—certainly three, and I think four; but failed to receive action in the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not seem to increase his rank. I do not understand what the bill is for. It says:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer on the retired-list of the United States Navy, an amount which, with payments heretofore made to him, will be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of the grade or rank held by him at the date of his retirement by a naval board of the United States Navy.

Mr. CAMERON. The report explains it.

Mr. COCKRELL. He wants to get 75 per cent. of sea-pay. I suppose he only received 75 per cent. of shore-pay. Do all officers of this grade when retired get 75 per cent. of sea-pay?

Mr. CAMERON. If put on the retired-list for disability incurred in the service. He was not so placed, but afterwards he proved that the disabilities were incurred in the service, and on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy the Senate has passed the bill on three different occasions.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

The bill (S. 954) for the relief of the heirs, legal representatives, or legatees of James W. Schaumburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the accounting officers of the Treasury to certify to the Secretary of War in favor of the heirs, legal representatives, or devisees of James W. Schaumburg the amount of the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of dragoons or cavalry, from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845; and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs, legal representatives, or legatees of Schaumburg the amount so certified, after deducting such sums as may have been paid and credited to him on account of such service.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read, or I should like some explanation of a bill to pay an officer for services rendered from 1836 to 1845.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator insist on the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall be glad to hear an explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. A short explanation will take less time than the reading of the report.

Although this is a stale claim, it is, in my judgment, one of merit and justice. There could not have been any greater injustice done under the law than was done to Lieutenant Schaumburg. The proofs fully verify the statements made in the report. Lieutenant Schaumburg was a second lieutenant in the Army stationed at Fort Des Moines, now the capital of the State of Iowa, in 1836. At that time and for a long time prior it had been a custom that had grown up in the War Department that in case an Army officer for any reason desired to have leave of absence for a certain length of time and it was impossible to obtain that leave, by reason of the slow communication, so as to enable him to accomplish his purpose, he could prepare and forward his resignation to the Secretary of War, providing in that letter of resignation that it should be accepted to take effect at a future day specified. It was the custom to accompany that letter of resignation with a private letter requesting that the resignation be not accepted and that leave of absence be granted. That was the practice in the War Department, as is abundantly shown by an order of President Jackson, subsequently issued by the Secretary of War under his direction, doing away with that practice, and by any amount of other evidence.

On the 6th of June, 1836, Second Lieutenant Schaumburg, of the United States Dragoons, obtained information that his father at New Orleans was seriously ill, which was to him a peremptory summons. It was impossible to communicate with the War Department and get leave of absence. He availed himself of the custom that had grown up, good or bad, in the Department, and on that date, June 6, 1836, he sent forward to the Secretary of War a letter of resignation, specifying in that resignation that it should take effect the 1st day of October following. He accompanied that by a private letter giving the reasons why he had sent the letter of resignation and requesting that it be not accepted and asking for leave of absence. That letter reached the War Department on the 26th of June. On the 28th of June of the same year a general order was issued, called Order No. 43, I believe, doing away with this practice, and on the 30th of June, two days afterwards, the Adjutant-General accepted the resignation of Lieutenant Schaumburg and specified in the order that the resignation should take effect one month from that date, on the 30th day of July.

The order, however, in accordance with this practice that had grown up in the Department, provided that all those who were then absent from their posts should have three months within which to return.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent to finish my statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator that the point I wanted to get at is explained in the report, if he will let the report from the bottom of the first page be read, from the order of June 30, 1836, down to page 2. I think that will explain it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; I am perfectly willing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the following from Senate Report No. 69, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL January 18, 1888:

If the validity of the order of June 30, 1836, purporting to relieve Lieutenant Schaumburg from the military service could properly be considered an undetermined question, it might be the duty of the committee to set forth in detail the personal considerations and influences that originated the order, but the illegality and invalidity of the order and of the attempt to deprive Lieutenant

Schaumburg of his position in the Army has been directly and conclusively settled by a judgment of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and the judgment was affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

In an action between the United States and the claimant, commenced in the district court in September, 1874, and determined in November, 1875, the legality of the order, and the question whether the claimant, Schaumburg, was a lieutenant during the period in question, was directly in issue, and the court, having before it the orders of the War Department, made during the attempt of Lieutenant Schaumburg's enemies to deprive him of his position in the Army, and the entire records relative to the subject, instructed the jury, as a matter of law, that Schaumburg, "from July 1, 1836, until March 24, 1845, was in the military service of the United States as a first lieutenant of dragoons or cavalry, and that he was entitled as such to credit for the pay and emoluments that accrued during that period," and a verdict and judgment were rendered in accordance with the instruction. This judgment was a judicial determination of the invalidity of the order, and that Lieutenant Schaumburg continued in the service. From this judgment an appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court, and the judgment was affirmed. (Schaumburg vs. United States, 13 Otto, 667.)

The court, under the issues presented, having full jurisdiction to determine Schaumburg's right to the office and to its emoluments, the nature of the issues required present payment or allowance in that cause of only $306.20 of the $11,471.51 then due to Schaumburg, thus reducing the indebtedness to $11,165.31; and it not being the province of the district court to render judgments directing present payment by the Government, this balance still remains unpaid. But as it was within the jurisdiction of the court to ascertain and determine whether Mr. Schaumburg was in the Army and entitled to pay, in order to determine whether the set-off should be made, the judgment is conclusive on whatever question was necessarily involved in that suit. It is, in the opinion of your committee, conclusive that Schaumburg was a lieutenant in the Army, notwithstanding the order of June 30, 1836, and of all that is material in the present claim, it being an elementary principle that the judgment of a court having jurisdiction is conclusive of the point determined in any future inquiry between the same parties relative to the same subject-matter.

Although this judgment would seem to render a further consideration of the validity of the order unnecessary for any purpose of determining the legal rights of the claimant, consideration for the hardships and delays to which the claimant has been subject for want of a full understanding of the question involved may justify a brief statement of the points originally involved.

Long prior to 1836 it had become a practice, having the approval of the War Department, that when some emergency rendered it important to an officer that he should absent himself from a distant post of duty sooner than it was possible to obtain an order granting leave of absence, the officer, at his own risk, made a formal tender of his resignation, conditioning the resignation to take effect at a specified future time. The resignation was inclosed with a letter explaining the emergency, asking the leave of absence, and requesting that the resignation be not accepted.

On the 6th of June, 1836, Schaumburg, then being a second lieutenant and stationed at Fort Des Moines, was informed that his father was sick and could not survive many weeks, and he sent such a letter with his resignation as second lieutenant, conditioned to take effect October 31, following.

June 28, 1836, the War Department issued an order forbidding the further continuance of that practice, and requiring all officers then absent under that practice to resume their duties within three months, or to vacate their commissions. It also contained the following:

"If the resignation of any officer be accepted it shall take effect within thirty days from the date of the order of acceptance."

By misconstruction of this language and misconception of legal rights the Adjutant-General issued an order on the 30th of June, 1836, purporting to accept the resignation of Second Lieutenant Schaumburg, to take effect July 30, 1836, disregarding the condition that had been made part of the proposed resignation; and in attempting to give force to the action then taken on the qualified resignation as second lieutenant, the Adjutant-General ignored the fact that after this attempt, namely, on July 1, 1836, Schaumburg was promoted and received a reappointment to the position of first lieutenant, being duly commissioned on July 1, 1836. Schaumburg subsequently accepted the office of first lieutenant.

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be seen from that that the simple question was whether the order of the War Department accepting the resignation of Lieutenant Schaumburg put him out of the Army or whether it did not put him out of the Army. The district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, in a case where the point was directly in issue as to the period of the termination of the service, decided that the order did not put Lieutenant Schaumburg out of the Army, but that he continued to be a first lieutenant in the Army from the 1st day of July, 1836, until some time in 1845. Therefore this matter has been passed upon judicially by the United States district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

I do not wish to take up time unless the Senator has some other trouble about the matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. The part of the report that I referred to satisfies me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I supposed it would satisfy the Senator.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEGRO SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' MONUMENT.

The bill (S. 406) making an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the negro soldiers and sailors who gave their lives for the preservation of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. VEST. Let that bill go over.

Mr. HOAR. I was very much in hopes the Senator would allow the bill to pass at this time. I desire to say that if it be passed at this time it will save the Senate from any elaborate speeches on the subject. I am afraid I shall be constrained to make one if it goes over.

Mr. VEST. I do not desire to make any speech on it myself.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill ought to be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his objection?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to go back to the last Calendar number, Senate bill 406. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] after an explanation has agreed to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 406) making an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the negro soldiers and sailors who gave their lives for the proservation of the Government. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his objection?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $100,000 for the erection of a monument to the negro soldiers and sailors who fell while fighting for the preservation of the nation's life in the war of the rebellion, in the Government reservation between Howard University, the Freedmen's Hospital, Four-and-a-half street, and Seventh street, in the District of Columbia, the money to be expended under the direction of a commission to consist of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. VEST. I simply want the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. I want to vote "nay."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the question, Shall the bill pass? the Senator from Missouri asks that the yeas and nays be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I have been paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I saw him in the Chamber this morning, but as I do not see him now, I presume the pair continues. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not see my colleague [Mr. KENNA] in the Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired on political questions with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I do not know but that I ought to withdraw my vote, having voted in the affirmative. I ask his colleague [Mr. VANCE] whether he regards this as such a question. I am paired on political questions with the Senator's colleague.

Mr. VANCE. I do not consider this a political question, but I am confident that if my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his vote.

Mr. HEARST. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 19; as follows:

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 544) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the county of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in section 2, line 7, after the word "that," to strike out the words "of the Lamoille Valley Extension Railroad Company's draw in their bridge across Missisquoy Bay" and to insert "of the draw in the bridge between the towns of Alburgh and North Hero, Vt.;" and in the same section, line 17, after the word "of," to strike out the word "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the structure authorized by the preceding section shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of such waters as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and shall be provided with such suitable and convenient draw as the said Secretary shall deem needful for the proper purposes of navigation, of width not less than that of the draw in the bridge between the towns of Alburgh and North Hero, Vt.; and the maintenance and management of said structure shall be subject to such of the provisions of section 6 of chapter 52 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress as the Secretary of War may, from time to time, deem needful; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law whenever the public good shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I notice a mistake in the enacting clause. It reads: "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives." It should read: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The necessary correction will be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLD SETTLERS' (CHEROKEES') CLAIM.

The bill (S. 428) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he is willing that the bill shall retain its place on the Calendar?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

ANSON RUDD.

The bill (S. 687) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to Anson Rudd, of the State of Colorado, certain real estate in the county of Fremont, in said State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, without consideration, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments conveying and transferring all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain tract of land situate in the county of Fremont and State of Colorado to Anson Rudd, being the same tract which Anson Rudd and Harriet Rudd, his wife, conveyed to the United States by general warranty deed, without consideration, dated March 20, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS H. NORTON AND JAMES M'LEAN.

The bill (S. 109) for the relief of Thomas H. Norton and James McLean was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,200 to pay Thomas H. Norton and James McLean amount of excess paid by them on coal entry numbered 1 at Del Norte land office, Colorado, July 10, 1882.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SARAH ELIZABETH HOLROYD.

The bill (S. 500) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of John Holroyd, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of John Holroyd, deceased, $1,000, in full consideration for the entire past and future use by the Government of the United States of the patented hook and eye for tackle-blocks of John Holroyd.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT January 23, 1888:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 500) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of John Holroyd, deceased, having examined the same, report as follows:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate Report No. 51, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, which said report is hereto annexed and made part of this report, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 94) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of the late John Holroyd, deceased, have duly considered the same and accompanying papers, and recommend that it pass.

"The facts upon which this recommendation is based are so fully set forth in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and extracts from the report of Chief of Ordnance, transmitted in response to a call from the Committee on Patents of the United States Senate, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, under date of February 23, 1882, that your committee ask to make the same a part of their report, and append a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that is pertinent:

"'NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 16, 1882.

"'SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d ultimo, inclosing a copy of a bill (S. 243) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of the late John Holroyd, deceased.

"'In compliance with your request for information in regard to the claim of the late Mr. Holroyd, I transmit a copy of a letter, with its inclosures, from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, furnishing answers to the questions presented by you; also a copy of a communication and accompanying report from the commandant of the navy-yard, Washington.

"'The bill is herewith returned.

"'Very respectfully,

"'ED. T. NICHOLS,
"'Acting Secretary of the Navy.

"'Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
"'Committee on Patents, United States Senate.'

"'BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"'Washington City, March 4, 1882.

"'SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a communication to the Navy Department from the chairman of the Senate Committee on Claims, dated December 23, 1881, requesting information concerning certain alleged inventions of the late John Holroyd.

"'I beg leave to submit, in reply to the questions contained in the said letter, the following remarks, and also the appended papers, which further explain the matter:

"'Reply to first question: The Navy Department is still using a hook and eye for tackle-blocks patented by the late John Holroyd March 18, 1873. * * *

"'Reply to second question: There is no evidence on file in this bureau that Mr. Holroyd ever claimed, or that the Government ever paid him, anything beyond the regular daily amount paid to and accepted by him in return for his services in the various positions that he held from time to time in the Ordnance Department. * * *

"'It is considered that $1,000 would be reasonable compensation to the estate of Mr. Holroyd for the past and future use by the Government of his patented hook and eye for tackle-blocks.

"'As regards the other articles on the Senate bill 243, it is not considered expedient that any allowance should be made upon them. * * *

"'I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"'MONTGOMERY SICARD,
"'Chief of Bureau.

"'Hon. WILLIAM H. HUNT,
"'Secretary of the Navy.'

"The Chief of Ordnance appends to his report, under head "gun-tackle blocks," the following:

"'The distinctive feature is the nib-hook, which holds a block steadily in a horizontal and convenient position. The eye assists in this.

"'This device is considered ingenious and original. * * *

"'The device has been extensively used in the past, but probably will not be as useful in the future.

"'It is thought that about 2,500 blocks have probably been made with the nib-hooks and eyes.' * * *

"APPENDIX.

"A decision by the Supreme Court in The United States vs. Burns (Wallace's Reports, vol. 12, page 252, December term, 1870), namely:

"'If an officer in the military service, not specially employed to make experiments with a view to suggest improvements, devises a new and valuable improvement in arms, tents, or any other kind of war material, he is entitled to the benefit of it, and to letters patent for the improvement from the United States, equally with any other citizen not engaged in such service; and the Government can not, after the patent is issued, make use of the improvement any more than a private individual without license of the inventor or making compensation to him.'"

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1027) to fix the charge for passports at $1; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CALIFORNIA MISSION INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 5, after the word "him," to insert the words "in favor of each band or village of Indians occupying any such reservation;" in line 8, after the word "patented," to insert "subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act;" in line 12, after the word "same," to insert "or the remaining portion not previously patented in severalty;" and in line 14, after the word "village," to strike out the words "subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act in fee;" so as to read:

That the commissioners, upon the completion of their duties, shall report the result to the Secretary of the Interior, who, if no valid objection exists, shall cause a patent to issue for each of the reservations selected by the commission and approved by him in favor of each band or village of Indians occupying any such reservation, which patent shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus patented, subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the band or village to which it is issued, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same or the remaining portion not previously patented in severalty by patent to said band or village, discharged of said trust, and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 24, after the word "separate," to strike out the words "certificate and;" so as to read:

Provided, That no patent shall embrace any tract or tracts to which existing valid rights have attached in favor of any person under any of the United States laws providing for the disposition of the public domain, unless such person shall acquiesce in and accept the appraisal provided for in the preceding section in all respects, and shall thereafter, upon demand and payment of said appraised value, execute a release of all title and claim thereto; and a separate patent, in similar form, may be issued for any such tract or tracts, at any time thereafter.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 29, after the word "person," to strike out "has" and insert the words "shall have;" so as to read:

Any such person shall be permitted to exercise the same right to take land under the public-land laws of the United States as though he had not made settlement on the lands embraced in said reservation, unless such person shall have been paid the value of his improvements as appraised by the aforesaid commission. And a separate patent, in similar form, may be issued for any tract or tracts at any time after the appraised value of improvements thereon shall have been paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 3 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That said patents declaring such lands to be held in trust, as aforesaid, shall be retained and kept in the Interior Department, and certified copies of the same shall be forwarded to and kept at the agency by the agent having charge of the Indians for whom such lands are to be held in trust, and said copies shall be open to inspection at such agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 13, after the word "eighty," to insert the words "nor more than six hundred and forty;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That whenever any of the Indians residing upon any reservation patented under the provisions of this act shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, be so advanced in civilization as to be capable of owning and managing land in severalty, the Secretary of the Interior may cause allotments to be made to such Indians, out of the land of such reservation, in quantity as follows: To each head of a family, not more than 640 acres nor less than 160 acres, at the discretion of said Secretary, of which such proportion, not exceeding 10 acres, as he shall deem for the best interest of the allottee, shall be arable land; to each single person over twenty-one years of age, not less than 80 nor more than 640 acres, apportioned in like manner.

Mr. TELLER. I think that must be an error. Section 4, it seems to me, contains a very liberal provision—

To each head of a family, not more than 640 acres nor less than 160 acres, at the discretion of said Secretary.

This amendment gives, in the same section, to each single person over twenty-one years of age not less than 80 nor more than 640 acres. I should like to inquire of the committee why it is thought proper to give to these Indians 640 acres when we have restricted our grants to white settlers to 160 acres.

Mr. PLATT. The history of the Mission Indians shows that by the encroachments of the people around them they have been crowded back until what they have now is all in the clouds, with the exception of a very few acres of land left, in the valleys. This 640 acres that it is proposed to give them will be up on mountain tops which can not be reached by any known means of travel at the present time, except by balloons. But the idea is to divide it up among the Indians eventually. Ten acres down in the valleys would be probably as much as any Indian would get of any really good arable land which could be cultivated to advantage. The truth is that their reservation has been almost entirely despoiled, so that what is left of it will be really good for nothing.

Mr. TELLER. To what reservation does the Senator allude?

Mr. PLATT. To pretty much all the lands of the Mission Indians about which we are talking. That is the case, as I understand it.

Mr. HEARST. Does the Senator wish me to tell him why it is proposed to give these Indians 640 acres?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know.

Mr. HEARST. These Indians have no other territory to go to. They do not own in their tribal capacity any territory outside of what we see fit to give them. They ought to have a little bit of pasture land, because the good land has been pretty much taken away from them already, and if they do not get that in good time they will never get any.

Mr. TELLER. This provision is not confined to pasture land. It it were there would be some reason for it. This is a general provision that they may have 640 acres of arable land anywhere outside of their reservation that is not taken up. If anybody can given me any reason why an Indian should have 640 acres when a white man gets only 160 acres, it would have to be a better reason than the Senator from California gives me in order to convince me that it is right.

If it is not too late I will ask that this bill may stand over until the committee may look at it further. I think I can make some suggestions to them, but I do not wish to object to the bill.

Mr. PLATT. It is very important that the bill should pass.

Mr. TELLER. But it certainly ought to be restricted to pasture land. Then the bill does great injustice, as I can show if necessary, to the settlers whose land may be taken. I do not object to the Indians taking the land if they compensate the owners, but there is no proper provision in the bill for that. I think the committee had better let the bill stand over to be called again. I shall not object to it on the second call of the docket. I should like to call the attention of the chairman to it and see if it can not be amended. I do not wish to offer any objection to the bill.

Mr. DAWES. This bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Colorado to object to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to object to it, but I ask the committee to let it stand over until the next call of the Calendar, and then we will see if there can not be some change made in it.

Mr. DAWES. The history of the bill is such that the Senator, I think, will find himself committed to it.

Mr. TELLER. I feel myself committed to doing something for these Mission Indians.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt about that. I have no doubt of what the Senator says.

Mr. TELLER. I think I have done more for them than anybody else in the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt about the Senator's sincerity. My remark was not intended to reflect upon that; but what particular measure shall be adopted has been a matter of great difficulty. A long time ago the Interior Department—I am quite confident it was at a time when it was under a very able administration—sent out a commission there, consisting of Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson and a very excellent gentleman on the Pacific Coast, who spent a great deal of time and made a very valuable report, which by that same Secretary of the Interior was transmitted to Congress with a bill prepared by them and recommended by him for passage. So far as I know, that identical bill has been reported favorably for two or three Congresses, and it is the bill now before Congress, so far as I recollect.

Mr. TELLER. No, this is not the bill which came from the Interior Department while I was Secretary.

Mr. DAWES. Of course I am not certain about that.

Mr. TELLER. I am frank to say that I approved that bill, and I have a full recollection of it. I took some interest in these people.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator desires the bill to go over, I will not object. I have no doubt the Senator desires to do, so far as can be done, exact justice to these Indians, because I know in the past the measures which the Senator has recommended; and when he goes carefully into this again and refreshes his memory, as I hope he will before to-morrow, I think we shall have his co-operation.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY SCHOOL LANDS.

The bill (S. 558) for the relief of certain settlers upon the school lands of Washington Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that sections 16 and 36 of each township of land in Washington Territory was reserved to that Territory for school purposes; that December 2, 1869, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, by an act duly passed, authorized the county commissioners of the several counties to lease those lands for a term of years not exceeding six, the money received therefor being placed in the school fund; and that the lands so leased are greatly enhanced in value by the cultivation thereof, and the lessees thereof have made valuable improvements thereon and incurred large expense in reducing the land to a state of cultivation, and will incur much loss if they are caused to abandon their improvements and cultivation; and that the validity of the leases is questioned.

The bill confirms the action of the county commissioners of the several counties of Washington Territory under the authority supposed to reside in the act of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory of December 2, 1869, entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of school lands in Washington Territory."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WILLIAM R. WHEATON AND CHARLES H. CHAMBERLAIN.

The bill (S. 664) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments: In line 7, after the words "the sum of" to strike out "$5,330.76" and insert "$3,800," and in line 9, after the word "being," to insert the words "a portion of;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to William R. Wheaton, register, and to Charles H. Chamberlain, ex-receiver of the land office at San Francisco, Cal., jointly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,800, being a portion of the amount deposited in the Treasury of the United States by them as fees for testimony which was taken by clerks whose compensation was paid from the private funds of said register and said ex-receiver.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON LAND DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 555) to establish an additional land district in the State of Oregon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That so much of the districts of lands subject to sale under existing laws at Lakeview, La Grande, and The Dalles land districts, in the State of Oregon, as are contained in the following boundaries shall constitute a new land district, to be called the Harney land district, bounded as follows: Commencing at Snake River, in the State of Oregon, on township line between townships 12 and 13 south of second standard parallel; thence west to northwest corner of township 13 south, of range 24 east of Willamette meridian; thence due south to the southwest corner of township 29 south, of range 23 east of Willamette meridian; thence due east to the boundary line of the State of Oregon; thence north on said boundary line to the place of beginning.

SEC. 2. That the location of the office of said district shall be designated by the President of the United States, and may be changed from time to time by him as the public convenience may seem to require.

SEC. 3. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, who shall respectively be required to reside at the site of the office, and be subject to the same laws and entitled to the same compensation as is or may be prescribed by law in relation to other land offices in said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL J. JOHNSON.

The bill (S. 1082) for the relief of I. R. B. Moore was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confirm the location made by Samuel J. Johnson for the north half of southwest quarter of section 17, in township 12 north, of range 9 west, in Arkansas, containing 80 acres, on the 4th March, 1861, with military bounty-land warrant No. 32256, for 80 acres, under act March 3, 1855, in the name of Achilles Ferrill or Terrill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the issuance of patent to certain land in Arkansas."

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF DAVID WALTER JONES.

The bill (S. 458) for the relief of the legal representatives of David Walter Jones was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "directed," to strike out the words:

To pay to the legal representatives of David Walter Jones, late receiver of public moneys at the Mineral Point United States land office, in the State of Wisconsin, the sum of $2,096.43, in full payment and satisfaction of the balances due from the United States to the said David Walter Jones as such late receiver of public moneys.

And to insert:

To adjust and audit the claim of the legal representatives of David Walter Jones, deceased, late receiver of public moneys at the Mineral Point United States land office, in the State of Wisconsin, for two balances, one of $1,860.85, and the other of $235.58, aggregating the sum of $2,096.43, now appearing by the records of the Treasury Department to be due to said Jones, and to pay to such legal representatives of said Jones whatever sum of money, if any, may be found due and unpaid.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to adjust and audit the claim of the legal representatives of David Walter Jones, deceased, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITURE OF UNEARNED RAILROAD LANDS.

The bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that that bill may lie over and retain its place on the Calendar, giving notice that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF GAS IN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 155) relating to the manufacture and sale of gas in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and amendatory of an act entitled "An act regulating gas-works," approved June 23, 1874, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection.

HOWARD D. POTTS.

The bill (S. 1370) for the relief of Assistant Engineer Howard D. Potts, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Assistant Engineer Howard D. Potts, United States Navy, on the retired-list of the Navy "for disabilities incurred in the line of duty from sickness or exposure therein."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN.

The bill (S. 728) for the relief of William J. Martin, of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It refers to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claim of William J. Martin, of Oregon, heretofore presented to the War Department, being a balance of $7,520 alleged to be due and owing to him under his contract for beef cattle, made with Lieut. G. W. Hawkins, in June, 1849, and for the delivery of beef cattle under such contract for the use of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS P. MORGAN, JR.

The bill (S. 603) for the relief of Thomas P. Morgan, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $4,898.04 to Thomas P. Morgan, jr., this sum being the amount of work done by him on the Norfolk Harbor, in the years 1881 and 1882, and declared forfeited to the United States by reason of the failure of Morgan to perform his contract within the time specified in his contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM C. DODGE.

The bill (S. 852) for the relief of William C. Dodge was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, to fill the blank in line 6 with the words "ten thousand dollars;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William C. Dodge, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $10,000 for a cartridge-loading machine furnished by him to the United States upon an order from the Ordnance Department, and for the use of his invention of the same, and of the patent therefor, dated July 17, 1866, and for his improvement in cartridges patented July 4, 1865, and for the infringement of his said patents by the United States; which said sum of $10,000 shall be in full satisfaction of all claims for such use and infringements, and for the relinquishment of all right to claim any further compensation for the use of the same by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSIGNEES OF ADDISON C. FLETCHER.

The bill (S. 395) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLATT January 25, 1888:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 395) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The Committee on Patents reported favorably a bill to the Forty-ninth Congress for the relief of Mr. Kirk and other assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, which bill was amended and passed by the Senate. The bill referred to the committee is understood to be the same in form as the one passed by the Senate, and its passage is recommended.

The report made by the committee at the last session is adopted and made part of this report, as follows:

"The legislation proposed by the bill is the reference of the claim of Hyland C. Kirk and others against the United States for the use of an alleged patented invention to the Court of Claims for an investigation of the facts involved. Two reasons exist why it can not be referred under the 'Bowman act,' so called, namely:

"1. That the statute of limitations runs against the claim, and

"2. That the present claimants are assignees of the original patentee.

"The committee think it is a case which may be properly referred to the Court of Claims for its investigation, reserving final action thereon to Congress, and recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill referred to the committee and the passage of the substitute bill, reported herewith, intended to secure such results.

"The facts upon which their action is based is well set forth in the report of the House Committee on Claims made at the present session, which is hereto appended and adopted as part of this report:

"'The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred House bill 3145, having fully considered the same, submit the following report:

"'This bill and the claim involved therein refer to a "perforated, tax-paid spirit stamp," adopted by the United States Government, under the act of July 20, 1868, and used in the collection of internal revenue during the years 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872. (See Exhibit A, specimen of the stamp.)

"'According to the deposition of W. S. Andrews, a former internal-revenue collector (see Fletcher vs. United States, page 5), Fletcher's design was carried to Washington by him and deposited in the Internal Revenue Department about the 1st of November, 1867. The same device with the written specifications thereto appended was "returned to inventor by Internal Revenue Department August 17, 1868. Witness, W. M. Smith." (Id., page 33.)

"'It appears from the records of the Patent Office that the title to this invention was originally claimed by four inventors. (See Exhibit B.) In the interference which was declared, the primary examiner decided in favor of Spencer M. Clark, at that time chief of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving.

"'The three examiners-in-chief, on appeal, reversed this decision, and decided in favor of Addison C. Fletcher.

"'Clark appealing, the Commissioner of Patents reversed the decision of the examiners-in-chief and decided in favor of Clark.

"'On appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, Judge George P. Fisher reversed the decision of the Commissioner of Patents and awarded priority of invention to Fletcher. (See Exhibit C, opinion of the court.)

"'From this decision there was no appeal. But Clark's original claims and specifications were modified and a patent was granted to him for substantially the same device and issued to Adolphus S. Solomons as assignee. (See Exhibits D and E, Fletcher's and Clark's patents.)

"'Fletcher made demand for compensation and brought suit against the Government therefor in 1872. The Court of Claims found in 1876, when the case was dismissed, that there had been two "inventors of the same mechanical contrivance in the form of a stamp," and disclaimed jurisdiction in patent cases; the defense chiefly resting on the use of Clark's patent, and not Fletcher's.

"'Solomons, Clark's assignee, brought suit in the Court of Claims, September 17, 1875, for compensation for the use of this stamp, which is still pending. The court's decision in favor of the petitioner's patent, Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, is now being used in the case by the Government as one of the defenses against Solomons. (See requests for findings of fact by the Attorney-General, Exhibit F.)

"'The petitioners' claim, being barred by the statute of limitations, they ask to be restored to court on the ground that they are the rightful owners of this stamp patent, and entitled to compensation.

"'Your committee have received a copy of a report, dated February 18, 1885, from the Internal Revenue Department, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, which recommends the reference of this claim to the Court of Claims. (See Exhibit G.)

"'In view, however, of the fact that this claim seems to involve a considerable sum of money, and that the passage of an act placing the matter in court to be tried upon its legal and equitable merits might seem to restrict the court to the finding of a judgment and to impose upon the Government the payment of a large sum of money in liquidation thereof, this bill provides simply that the claim be referred to the Court of Claims for a judicial investigation and finding of the facts, subject to the future action of Congress.

"'The committee return the accompanying bill as a substitute for bill H.R.3145, and recommend its passage, and that the original bill (H. R. 3145) do lie upon the table.'"

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest, in line 20, on page 2, an amendment which I trust will be accepted. In line 20, after the word "owners," I move to strike out the words "together with the right of recovery and compensation" and insert "and their right to recover compensation." The bill now reads:

Issued to Addison C. Fletcher and alleged to have been duly assigned to said owners, together with the right of recovery and compensation for the alleged use thereof by the United States Government in the collection of revenue on distilled spirits and malt liquors during the years.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think there is any objection to that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the amendment makes it a little more explicit than it otherwise would be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 26 I suggest an amendment, which is a mere matter of grammatical construction, to strike out "is" and insert "are;" so as to read, "and are hereby referred to the Court of Claims." There is more than one thing to be referred to the court.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 34, after the words "and the right of the claimants," I move to insert the words "to compensation."

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 40, after the word "sums," I suggest the insertion of the insignificant words "if any;" so as to read:

To find the aggregate sum or sums, if any.

It seems to take it for granted that there is to be a sum, and the words "if any" will leave that in doubt.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 836) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 2442) to increase the appropriation for the public building at Detroit, Mich.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 437) for the relief of Claude H. Mastin, surviving partner of the firm of Le Vert & Mastin, of Mobile, Ala., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. CHACE. I report from the Committee on Patents, with amendments, the bill (S. 554) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, otherwise called the international copyright bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island who has made this report upon what is known as the question of international copyright whether it is based upon what is called the protective principle? I should like to ask him further whether the persons who have promoted the introduction of the bill and the report of it by the committee are persons who are in favor of what is known as the protective principle as applied to the labor and production of other persons than themselves?

Mr. CHACE. I will endeavor very briefly to answer the question of the Senator from Kansas. The provisions of the bill have no reference whatever to either the question of protection to American industries in the common acceptation of that term or the question of free trade. The tariff upon books might be doubled or quadrupled or it might be entirely repealed without having the slightest effect upon the operation of this bill. This is simply——

Mr. HARRIS. The copyright bill is not under consideration, I think.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Rhode Island is answering a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. But it is not under consideration at present, I should think.

Mr. CHACE. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from Kansas asked me a question. I will answer it very briefly. I will take but a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Rhode Island proceeding?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course the Senator may finish his statement. I will not object to his concluding his statement, but I would prefer to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. CHACE. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I was necessarily called out of the Senate this morning during the morning hour, or I should have reported the bill at that time.

With reference to the views of the persons who are promoting the introduction and passage of the bill, I wish to say to the Senator from Kansas that they represent every possible shade of sentiment in regard to the question of protection and free trade. You will find ranged among the advocates of the bill extreme protectionists, extreme theoretical free-traders, mugwumps, Democrats, and Republicans, and men who believe in a revenue tariff and in moderate protection.

I desire to say further that the measure is non-partisan in character; that it has not the slightest political complexion. It is simply a question of national honor, a question whether we will do ourselves justice by recognizing the rights of foreign authors and thereby helping our own authors to secure their rights under the law.

Mr. PLUMB. I asked the question because I noticed some time ago in the proceedings of a meeting of authors in New York that the person who lately held down the position of minister from the United States to England, in appearing before the assemblage for the purpose of advocating international copyright, felt constrained to apologize to his audience on account of the fact that he was advocating protection for himself and his guild, while at the same time he was himself in favor of denying protection to other people who labor with their hands. He of course put himself in the attitude of saying that he thought head-work was entitled to protection, but hand-work was not entitled to protection.

I only wanted to know upon what theory the committee had proceeded in preparing this bill, and whether it was designed to give something to the people who are denying the same protection to other people which they ask for themselves?

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CHACE. I wish to state, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. HARRIS. The regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist that the order made by unanimous consent ought not to be violated any further in this way, and I shall object to the report being received if I can not get rid of it in any other manner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

ESTATE OF THOMAS L. PRICE.

The bill (S. 475) for the relief of the estate of Thomas L. Price, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments: In line 8, to strike out the name "Warninner" and insert "Warinner;" in line 10 strike out the name "Col. J. H. Eaton" and insert "General John C. Frémont;" and in line 11, before the word "purposes," to insert the word "public;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to credit to Thomas L. Price, of Jefferson City, Mo., late brigadier-general of the United States volunteers, and now deceased, the sum of $2,000, being the amount received at Jefferson City, October 7, 1861, of R. O. Warinner, a paymaster in the United States Army, by order of General John C. Frémont, for special public purposes at that post by said Price, then commanding said post, and to release the estate of said Price from any and all liability therefor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION OF SOLDIERS' ROLLS.

The bill (S. 1295) for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy during the war of the rebellion, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "required," to insert the words "to correct the rolls and;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to correct the rolls and to issue certificates of discharge or orders of acceptance of resignation, upon application and proof of identity, in the true name of such persons as enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army and Navy, during the war of the rebellion, and were honorably discharged therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 10, after the word "for," to insert the words "correction of rolls and for;" and, in line 13, after the word "such," to insert the words "correction of the rolls shall be made or such;" so as to read:

Applications for correction of rolls and for said certificates of discharge or amended orders of resignation may be made by or on behalf of persons entitled to them; but no such correction of the rolls shall be made or such certificate or order shall be issued where a name was assumed to cover crime or to avoid its consequences.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FALSE CAPE LIGHT-SHIP.

The bill (S. 1091) to establish a light-ship off False Cape, seacoast of Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be necessary to have a brief executive session, and if it is the pleasure of the Senate now, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. Had we not better run on until 5 o'clock and have an executive session then?

Mr. TELLER. Let us go on until 5 o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just as the Senate wishes.

Mr. SAWYER. Let us go on to 5 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not insist on his motion now.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right. At 5 o'clock I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

FRAUDULENT LAND-WARRANTS.

The bill (S. 245) to investigate the issue of fraudulent land-warrants, and to protect soldiers and sailors of the United States from loss therefrom, was announced as the next bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. That bill was reported adversely from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was adversely reported and goes over under objection.

FLORIDA RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The bill (S. 1708) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, under an act of Congress approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Is it the intention of this bill to direct the Attorney-General to bring certain suits, or only to authorize him to do it? That is the inquiry I should like to make of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. CALL. I do not see the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] in the Chamber. A similar bill was passed, after full debate, in the last Congress. This same bill exactly has been twice discussed and passed by the Senate. The bill directs the Attorney-General to bring suit.

Mr. PLATT. I have an impression that the first section of the bill is not exactly in the shape that it ought to be; but I make no objection to its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIVE-OAK LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 196) to cancel certain reservations of lands, on account of live-oak, in the Southwestern land district of the State of Louisiana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to cancel and annul the reservation set apart by order of the President, October 21, 1845, in the Southwestern land district of the State of Louisiana, known as Pecan Island. All persons who have in good faith settled upon and made improvements upon Pecan Island at the time of the passage of the act, and who occupy the same, shall be entitled to enter the same, not exceeding 160 acres each, under the provisions of the homestead laws, and be admitted to make their proofs and complete their titles in the same manner as if the reservations for live-oak had not been made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next two bills on the Calendar, the bill (S. 747) granting aid in the construction of a railroad from the town of Titusville, Brevard County, Florida, to the Bight of Canaveral, with a branch to Banana River, in said State, and the bill (S. 1469) for the relief of the settlers upon the lands along the Des Moines River, above the Raccoon Falls, in the State of Iowa, having been adversely reported, will take their places on the Calendar under Rule IX.

COLORADO SALT SPRINGS.

The bill (S. 761) to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a State constitution and State government; for the admission of the said State into the Union on equal footing with the original States," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to amend section 11 of "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and admission of the said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved March 3, 1875, so as to read:

SEC. 11. That all salt springs within said State, not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining, as contiguous as may be to each, shall be granted to said State for its use, the said land to be selected by the governor of said State within two years after the approval of this act: Provided, That if the surveys of the land so sought to be selected shall not be made within said two years, the time for said selections shall be extended for one year after the plats of the surveys have been made of said lands, are filed in the district land office for the proper district, and when so selected to be used and disposed of on such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Legislature shall direct: Provided, That no salt springs or lands the right whereof is now vested in any individual or individuals, or which shall hereafter be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall by this act be granted to said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PAGOSA SPRINGS PUBLIC PARK.

The bill (S. 957) to establish a public park at Pagosa Springs, in the State of Colorado, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 27, after the word "hereby," to strike out the words "forever reserved from sale and dedicated to public use as a park, to be hereafter known as Bruno Park," and to insert:

Granted to the State of Colorado for a public park on the condition that the same shall be kept and maintained by the State for that use, and if at any time the said land shall be diverted from such use it shall revert and become the property of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the land so reserved for a public park shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall provide for the survey of said park and marking the boundaries thereof; and he shall have power to provide for the preservation of the timber and for the protection of the natural curiosities contained in said park; and for that purpose he may appoint a superintendent to take charge of and exercise authority over said park, and who shall receive such annual compensation for such services as the Secretary of the Interior may determine; and such service may be terminated at any time the Secretary may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION CLAIMS IN OREGON AND WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 1709) to provide for the issue of patents to certain persons for donation claims under the act approved September 27, 1850, commonly known as the donation law, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I object to this bill. I think we should not pass it without longer discussion than we can have at present. We ought to have some country road without a railroad on it. I object to the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will allow the Senate to consider the bill. It has been very carefully considered by the committee, and it is important, if passed at all, that the incorporators should go to work at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Vermont to object, and the bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

DETAILS OF ARMY OFFICERS TO EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

The bill (S. 186) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, relating to details of Army officers to educational institutions, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in section 1, line 14, after the word "fifty," to insert "from the Army and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty;" and in line 28, after the words "out of," to strike out "any small-arms or pieces of field artillery" and insert "ordnance and ordnance stores;" so as to make the bill read:

That section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, further amended, so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1225. The President may, upon the application of any established college or university within the United States having capacity to educate at the same time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof; but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed fifty from the Army and ten from the Navy, being a maximum of sixty, at any time, and they shall be apportioned throughout the United States, first, to those State institutions applying for such detail that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be the practical instruction of the industrial classes in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics; and after that, said details to be distributed, as nearly as may be practicable, according to population. Officers so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed from time to time by the President. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college or university under the provisions of this section, and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case, in double the value of the property, for the care and safe-keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when required."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the last clause. The bill will go into effect on its passage, of course, without saying so.

Mr. MANDERSON. Strike out all after the word "existing," in the eighth line of section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 8, after the word "existing," it is proposed to strike out:

And this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval according to law.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the said section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the said act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, saving always, however, all acts and things done under the said amended section as heretofore existing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANDERSON, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions," etc.

TIMBER ON MENOMONEE LANDS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. DAWES. I have discovered a misprint in a word in a bill already passed, which I ask unanimous consent may be changed. It is Calendar No. 57, being the bill (S. 358) to authorize the sale of timber on certain land reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin. In section 4, line 7, the word "that," after the word "provided," should be "and" to make sense. The section would then read:

SEC. 4. That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the expenses of survey, appraisal, and sale thereof, which expenses shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States from the first proceeds of the sale of timber as hereinbefore provided, and the residue of such proceeds shall be paid to or funded for the benefit of said tribe, in such manner as the President may determine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the amendment suggested by him be made to the text of the bill. The amendment may be agreed to by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The proper journal entries will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me first submit the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized as making the motion. If he yields for the purpose of enabling the Senator from New Hampshire to introduce a bill, the Chair will receive the bill.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2443) providing, in the appointments to the civil service, for the preference in certain cases of persons who were engaged in the military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States of America during the war of the rebellion, and who were disabled therein and were not dishonorably discharged therefrom; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill draws the same distinction between those engaged in the military service of the Confederate States and other disloyal persons that is drawn in regard to loyal persons who were not engaged in service and those who were engaged in the service of the United States during the war.

Mr. DAWES. If that is not a long bill, I should like to hear it read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That before persons shall be appointed to the civil service of the United States it shall be made to appear whether such persons were loyal to the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion, if of lawful age at any time during said war; and whenever such persons not loyal to the United States during said war shall be appointed to office in the civil service, those not dishonorably discharged from the military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States, and now suffering from disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in said service, shall be preferred to other persons not shown to have been loyal in the war of the rebellion, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary to the proper discharge of such offices.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear the title of that bill read once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill providing in the appointments to the civil service for the preference in certain cases of persons who were engaged in the military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States of America during the war of the rebellion, and who were disabled therein and were not dishonorably discharged therefrom.

Mr. PLATT. That is a pretty unfortunate title, and I will not consent to the second reading of such a bill to-day.

BRIDGE AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. NEAL. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1076) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

As proposed to be amended it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the Chattanooga Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, having its principal office at Chattanooga, in said State, and to its successors or assigns, to build, construct, and maintain a bridge, as hereinafter described, across the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, the southern terminus of said bridge to be at some point between the west line of Market street and the east line of Georgia avenue of said city, and the bridge to be constructed at right angles to said stream to a point on the north side thereof. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of street cars, wagons, and vehicles, and the transit of animals and foot-passengers, and equal facilities for passage across said bridge shall be afforded to all wagons and vehicles and the cars of all street-car companies.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the highways leading to said bridge; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-routes in the United States, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph purposes.

SEC. 3. That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, the two main spans thereof shall be over the main channels of the river and not less than 300 feet each in length in the clear, and the remaining spans shall not be less than 200 feet each in length in the clear. The lowest part of the superstructure of the south span of said bridge shall not be less than 100 feet and the remaining spans not less than 90 feet above low-water mark as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to and its piers parallel to the current of the river: Provided, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge its draw shall be over the main channel at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans giving a clear water-way, measured at the lowest stage of water known at the locality, of not less than 160 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; the main unbroken span of the bridge shall not be less than 300 feet in the clear, and the remaining spans not less than 200 feet each in the clear, and the lowest part of the superstructure of all the principal spans shall not be less than 75 feet above low-water mark as understood at the point of location, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to and the bridge itself at right angles to the current of the river: Provided, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signals for the passage of boats or vessels; and said corporation shall maintain at its own expense from sunset to sunrise such light or other signals as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

SEC. 4. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. Said company shall be allowed to charge reasonable tolls for transit over said bridge, but the Secretary of War shall have the right from time to time to revise, prescribe, and determine such rates or tolls.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge is hereby expressly reserved; and any alteration or change that may be required by Congress in the bridge constructed under this act shall be made by the corporation or party owning or controlling the same at its own expense. If the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced within two and completed within four years after the passage of this act, all privileges conferred hereby and this act shall become null and void.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Are separate votes demanded on the amendments?

No separate vote was demanded, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y.

Mr. WEBER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 1689) providing for the erection of a public building at Suspension Bridge, N. Y.

The bill, which was reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAND. If the House will give consent to two hours for the consideration of the bill, I shall not object; otherwise I shall. I do not think it quite proper that these bills making appropriations for public buildings should be rushed through by unanimous consent and without time for debate and consideration. I ask that two hours shall be devoted to the consideration of the bill if it is to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri states that he objects to the consideration of the bill unless two hours are allowed for debate. Is there objection to that arrangement?

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Missouri can not make a conditional objection. He must either object to the consideration of the bill or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to the consideration of the bill, but says he will withdraw the objection if two hours are allowed for debate.

Mr. WEBER. If I can make it more palatable to the gentleman on the other side I will state that I do not propose to occupy more than five minutes and he can have an hour.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

WOOL-GROWING INDUSTRY.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a petition signed by about two thousand voters of Guernsey County, Ohio, for the restoration of the 1867 tariff on wool; also, another, extensively signed through the district, in reference to the duty on wool. It has been signed by several thousand legal voters.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How long are those petitions?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The one consists of five lines and the other is longer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

Subsequently the objection was withdrawn, and unanimous consent was given to print the petitions in the RECORD.

They are as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners, wool-growers of Guernsey County, Ohio, solicitous for the maintenance of an industry already greatly impaired, respectfully ask for the re-enactment of the tariff of 1867 as applicable to wool, with such amendments as will give to the wool-grower protection equivalent to that given him by said law.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the county of Noble and State of Ohio: We respectfully petition your honorable body for speedy action on the subject of protection to the wool-growing and woolen-manufacturing industries of this country. They represent that the changes made by the act of Congress of March 3, 1883, reducing protection to these industries, have already resulted in great injury to the sheep-growing interest, as well as to the manufacturing interests, and that, if continued, must result in the destruction, to a very great extent, of the wool-growing industry in all parts of our country, and also largely increase the price of mutton to the consumer. They represent that the number of sheep in the United States in 1883 was 49,237,291 (an increase of 15,453,691 since 1875), and which was reduced to 44,759,314 in 1887, showing a loss of 4,477,977 sheep in four years, whilst with proper protection the number, at the same ratio of increase, in 1887 would probably have been about 64,000,000. A further effect of this injurious legislation was an enormous increase in importation of foreign wool, both in unmanufactured and manufactured state, especially the latter, to the great loss of our domestic laboring classes, whether employed on farms or in workshops, and yielding an increase in revenue to the Government of about $4,000,000 per annum at a time when it was not needed.

They therefore ask that the schedule of duties unanimously agreed upon by the representatives of the wool growers and woolen manufacturers at Washington, on January 14, 1888, may be enacted into a law at an early day, and, pending the passage of such bill, in accordance with the further action of said convention, "we urgently request Congress to immediately pass a joint resolution correcting the present erroneous classification of worsteds by directing that they be classified as woolen cloths."

DUTIES ON FARM PRODUCE.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to present and have printed in the RECORD a memorial of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture against any reductions of the duties imposed on farm produce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

Subsequently, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, withdrew his objection.

The memorial is as follows:

NEW JERSEY STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Trenton, N. J., March 12, 1888.

In the name of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture we emphatically protest against any reduction of the duties imposed on farm produce, and we hereby memorialize our Senators and Members of Congress that in making any changes in our revenue laws they should increase rather than decrease the duties on all raw materials produced in this country.

E. BURROUGH, President.

Attest:
FRANKLIN DYE, Secretary.

AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC-LAND BILL.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD amendments to the bill (H. R. 7901) which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Consent has already been given to print amendments to that bill.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Insert, in line 2, section 29, after "sections," "2259, 2260, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2267, 2273."

Amend section 24, in line 4, by striking out "three" and inserting "six."

Amend section 25 by adding:

"It is further provided, That in all cases where notice by publication of intention to make final proof upon any land taken under the provision of this act is required the entrymen shall be allowed ten days following the day named in the advertisement in which to complete proof and present witnesses."

Additional section, to follow section 25:

"That any person who may make a homestead entry upon any of the agricultural lands of the United States under the provisions of this act, and who shall erect a dwelling-house thereupon worth at least $300, and shall put into cultivation 20 acres of said land, shall, after one year's residence thereon, have the right to commute said entry under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and upon the payment of $1.25 per acre shall be entitled to receive a patent for said land."

Mr. FELTON offered the following amendment:

Strike out the words "or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such as required by the naturalization laws," in lines 5 and 6, page 2; lines 5, 6, and 7, page 8, and lines 7, 8, and 9, page 12 of the printed bill.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. LYMAN presented concurrent resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, in favor of the passage of the Senate bill now pending for the relief of settlers on what are known as the Des Moines River lands in Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. FULLER presented concurrent resolutions of the General Assembly of Iowa, asking the passage of the bill introduced in the Senate by Hon. JAMES F. WILSON and now pending, so far as it has for its object to provide that the Attorney-General immediately commence proceedings in the courts with a view to remove all clouds from the title to the lands known as "Des Moines River lands;" which were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROAD STRIKES.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, offered a resolution directing the appointment of a committee of five members of the House to investigate railroad strikes and to report what legislation is necessary to prevent such obstructions to commerce and disturbance of the public peace; and asked unanimous consent that the resolution be read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The request to have the resolution printed in the RECORD is not in order during the pendency of this call.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Is it in order to ask to have the resolution read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Then I ask to have it read.

The resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Is it not now in order to ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request is not in order till this call is completed, when the Chair will recognize the gentleman to make the request.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does not the resolution go into the RECORD without any such request?

Mr. CLARDY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether this resolution should not properly go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine the resolution. During the reading there was so much confusion that the Chair did not understand it distinctly. [After examining the resolution.] The point made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is sustained. The resolution proposes that the Speaker appoint a special committee for a certain investigation. The reference of the resolution will be changed, and it will be referred to the Committee on Rules. The Chair will now hear the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. My inquiry was whether or not the resolution, having been read, did not under the rule go into the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not. During this call any member has the right to call for the reading of every bill or resolution presented; but such reading does not necessarily cause the printing of the document in the RECORD. The request for that purpose must be made after the call is over.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it not the custom to print these resolutions in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. The Chair knows of no instance in which it has ever been done, except by the action of the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, I do not want to make any further question with the Chair; but I remember very distinctly a case where it was done a few days ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, if the gentleman will examine that case, he will find, unless it was a mistake on the part of officers of the House, it was done by order of the House. But when the regular call of the States on Monday for the introduction of bills and resolutions is proceeding no request for printing in the RECORD any bill or resolution is in order. Such requests are entertained at the conclusion of the call.

RELIEF TO DES MOINES RIVER LAND SETTLERS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, requesting Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State to vote for the passage of the bill giving relief to settlers on Des Moines River lands; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] has introduced a resolution, just read by its title, which the Chair has stated belongs to the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Kansas moves that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this a resolution fixing a time for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution again.

The Clerk again read the title of the resolution.

TREASURY SURPLUS.

Whereas according to official estimates the surplus in the national Treasury will at the end of the present fiscal year amount to the unparalleled sum of not less than $147,000,000, which surplus is in addition to (and does not include) the $100,000,000 in gold which has been kept since 1879 in the Treasury to redeem legal-tender Treasury notes; and

Whereas it is conceded by all that the withdrawal of this enormous surplus from the channels of trade is disastrous to the business interests of the country and paralyzes industry, and that our laws should be so amended as to prevent a continuance of this unnecessary and injurious accumulation of the money of our people; and

Whereas this surplus is the result of our present high and oppressive tariff taxes, imposed under the plea of protecting home labor and industries in their infancy, and that notwithstanding this tariff protects the manufactures of our country from foreign competition and enables many of our manufacturers and business men to charge the people much more than they otherwise could (or should) for articles of necessity; and

Whereas divers persons, companies, and corporations who, as proprietors and owners, are engaged in many of the industries and branches of business so protected, inspired with insatiate greed, and in violation of all good faith with our people (who have been told by them that the imposition of these tariff taxes was but a temporary contribution in aid of American manufactures), have conspired and combined together to filch and plunder them, by the formation of monopolies called "trusts," by means of which prices are to be increased and kept up permanently, and healthy competition prevented and defeated: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, instructed to report a bill placing all such articles and products as are so protected by any such "trust" or monopolistic combination upon the free-list, or as nearly so as the financial requirements of the Government will permit.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROAD STRIKES.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution introduced by me this morning for the investigation of railroad strikes be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the strike of the locomotive engineers on the line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad resulted in an obstruction to interstate commerce and put in jeopardy the public peace; and

Whereas the management of said road claim to have supplied with competent men the places vacated at the time of said strike, and claim to have restored said company to a proper discharge of its duties and obligations as a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce; and

Whereas it is alleged that the new men thus placed upon the engines on said road are incompetent and unfit to discharge the responsible duties of locomotive engineers; and

Whereas it is alleged that the claim of a resumption of public duties and obligations on the part of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company is a fraudulent pretense and a gross imposition upon the public, placing in imminent peril both life and property; and

Whereas on lawful request of citizens of Creston, Iowa, the Iowa State Board of Railroad Commissioners, heretofore commended by railroad authorities as an eminently conservative body, have made an investigation of the competency of said new engineers and reported their doings officially to the governor of Iowa, in which report the commissioners say: "It may be regarded as proven beyond question that the men were inexperienced, and we do not hesitate to say they are incompetent;" and

Whereas there is now in progress on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, a line engaged in interstate commerce, a great strike substantially similar in its character and in its effects upon commerce and the interests of the country at large as the strike upon the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy line; and

Whereas such conflicts between the officers and employés of common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, fraught as they are with danger to life and property and to the public peace, are matters of great national concern, demanding prompt and careful consideration by Congress to the end that laws may be enacted defining and enforcing the mutual rights and duties of such officers and employés and their relations to the public: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint a special committee of five members of the House whose duty it shall be to proceed at once to the scene of said strikes, then and there to make investigation thereof with a view to ascertaining what legislation is necessary in the matter of defining and enforcing the mutual rights and duties of the officers, managers, and employés of railroad companies and other common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and the relations of each to the public, to the end that danger to life, obstruction to commerce, and jeopardy to the public peace may be prevented and averted; and that said committee may employ a stenographer and a clerk, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and compel the attendance of persons and the production of books and papers. And the expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA, TARIFF DUTIES, ETC.

Mr. MACDONALD, by unanimous consent, presented the following memorial of members of the Farmers' Alliance of McLeod County, Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

SUMTER, MINN., March 6, 1888.

To the members of the Fiftieth Congress of the United States:

We, the members of the McLeod County Farmers' Alliance, do hereby petition you as follows:

First. Believing the present laws with the amendments proposed by Commissioner Colman are ample and sufficient for the protection of stock from contagious diseases, we petition you to defeat the passage of the Miller-Carey Senate bill, No. 945.

Second. Viewing with alarm the rapid accumulation of coal and timber lands by combinations of capitalists in the form of "syndicates" and railroad companies, we petition you to pass stringent laws for the protection of our mines and forests and their reservation for the use of the common people.

Third. We petition you to reduce the tariff duties on lumber, coal, salt, iron and its manufactures, sugar, binding twine, woolen manufactures, and other necessaries of life in use by laboring classes of our people.

Fourth. We petition you to at once pass a law prohibiting the formation of "trusts" and "syndicates" for the control of the price and manufacture of the necessaries of life, and prescribing severe penalties therefor.

Resolved, That our secretary is hereby instructed to send a copy of this petition to Hon. J. L. MACDONALD for presentation to Congress.

B. F. JENKINS, President.
M. CUTLER, Secretary.

Mr. MACDONALD. I wish to say that I am heartily in favor of the recommendations of the memorialists.

TARIFF ON RAW MATERIALS, ETC.

Mr. REED, by unanimous consent, presented the following petition from manufacturers of New England; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

FEBRUARY, 1888.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress, assembled:

The undersigned, manufacturers in New England, recognizing the principle of protection as national and not provincial, and consequently equally applicable to all the industries of the United States; repudiating any distiction in this connection between so-called "raw materials" of domestic production and "finished products," whether the output of mines, farms, or workshops; claiming that the American policy should benefit alike all citizens, whether engaged in agriculture, manufacturing, or mining; that the industries of the country are interdependent and mutually sustaining, and the people of the different sections co-customers and co-consumers—

Do therefore respectfully submit that no article, "raw" or otherwise, of home production should be added to the free-list or inequitably changed in the tariff rates.

The undersigned also submit that, for a due understanding of the premises, the following official records of the Government should be kept in mind, to wit:

Free imports: Increase in twenty years, 1868 to 1887, from $29,000,000 to $233,000,000, or 700 per cent.

Dutiable imports: For same period, increase from $329,000,000 to $450,000,000, or 37 per cent.

Customs duties: For same period, increase from $164,000,000 to $214,000,000, or 30 per cent.

Also, that the expenditures of the Government, including sinking fund, for the last fiscal year, were about $100,000,000 in excess of the customs receipts.

Believing that the existing tariff policy, both free and dutiable, is working in harmony with the industrial and productive interests of all sections of the country, the undersigned deprecate any departure from this policy, whether directed against "raw" or "finished" American products.

QUARANTINE STATION, SHIP ISLAND, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WILKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE].

Mr. STOCKDALE. I present resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi memoralizing Congress to assist the State board of health of the State of Mississippi in establishing a quarantine station on Ship Island, and move its reference to the Committee on Commerce, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolution is as follows:

A resolution memorializing Congress to assist our State board of health in establishing quarantine service on Ship Island.

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi now assembled, That Congress or the proper Department at Washington City, through our Senators and Representatives, be requested to donate the necessary buildings now on Ship Island, erected by the United States Government, which would be suitable for quarantine-inspection service, now necessary to be conducted and carried on by the State board of health of the State of Mississippi, to said board and for said service, and that the clerk of this house be required at once to send copies of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

LANDS DONATED TO MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. STOCKDALE also presented a memorial of the State Legislature of Mississippi, asking confirmation of the title to certain lands donated to Mississippi by act of Congress of September 28, 1859; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial to Congress asking confirmation of titles to certain lands donated to the State of Mississippi by act of Congress passed September 28, 1859.

Whereas Congress, by an act passed September 28, 1859, donated to the several States the lands within their borders subject to overflow or being too wet for cultivation; and

Whereas the governor did, prior to 1860, and in conformity with the then existing regulations, appoint one H. Krebs, —— Breland, and —— Hawthorn to select lands inuring to the State of Mississippi under the aforesaid act; and

Whereas the said Krebs, Breland, and Hawthorn did proceed to and did make the selection of certain lands under the then existing law and instructions, and file the lists properly sworn and certified to, the lists having been filed with the proper local United States land officers; and

Whereas the said lists, through no fault of the State of Mississippi or her officials, did not receive the approval of the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, but that the said lists were lost sight of by the Federal officials until a recent date, and then came to light by a change in the regulations, and after more than twenty years' delay, and after the State had sold and conveyed a large part of the land embraced in the said lists in good faith, and believing that she had a good and perfect title to the lands embraced in the said lists; and

Whereas the Department of the Interior, under its late regulations, holds the said State selections for rejection, to the injury of the citizens who believed the title derived from the State to be a good and valid title: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi, That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to use their best endeavors to have Congress confirm to the State of Mississippi the title to the lands embraced in the aforesaid selections.

Be it further resolved, That the clerk of the house be requested to send a copy of this memorial to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

SALE OF RESERVED LANDS, HARRISON COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. STOCKDALE also, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the State Legislature of Mississippi, asking for the passage of an act putting the reserved lands of Harrison County, Mississippi, on the market; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

An act memorializing Congress to pass an act placing the naval reserve lands of the United States Government situated in Harrison County, on the market.

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, That our members of Congress and of the United States Senate be requested and urged to pass an act placing naval reserve lands of Harrison County, in lots of not more than 160 acres to any one individual, he or she being the head of a family and a resident citizen of the State of Mississippi, provided no land shall be so opened to purchase that comes under the head of live-oak lands.

This memorial is for the purpose of placing in the reach of citizens of this State pine lands reserved by the Government for naval purposes, and which are of no service to the Government.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. CAINE. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the memorial of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, protesting against the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from their present reservation in Colorado to the Uintah Indian reservation or other place in the Territory of Utah, as contemplated in the bill (H. R. 1265) authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from the State of Colorado to the Territory of Utah, as a movement fraught with danger to the white settlers and demoralization to the Uintah Indians, be printed in the RECORD. That bill is not in the committee, but is before the House, and for that reason I wish this memorial brought to the attention of the members.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does the printing include the signatures?

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to print the signatures unless that is the special order of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Territory of Utah, ss:

MARCH 3, 1888.

I, William C. Hall, secretary of the Territory of Utah, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of the memorial to Congress by the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, resolved at the twenty-eighth session of said Assembly, is a true and literal exemplification of the original on file and of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the great seal of the Territory to be affixed at Salt Lake City the day and year above written.

[SEAL.]

WM. C. HALL,
Secretary of Utah Territory.

Memorial to Congress.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, represent that the measure (H. R. 1265) now pending before your honorable body, contemplating the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from their existing reservation in the State of Colorado to the Territory of Utah, and massing them incongruously with the tribes already on the Uintah reservation, is unjust in itself, and fraught with certain danger to the lives and property of all settlers in the valleys of Green River and its many tributaries in the eastern borders of this Territory.

These Utes are now the only tribe of Indians that has not passed through the process of subjugation which must precede a settled peace, and the proposed scheme of massing them incongruously with other tribes within the borders of this Territory is unfair as well as dangerous to the white settlements in the eastern portions of Utah, and impolitic as well as unjust to the tribes already settled upon the Uintah reservation, who have made considerable progress in the peaceful pursuits of civilization.

Numerous white settlements have already extended along the valleys of Green River and its tributaries, the lives and property of whose citizens would be exposed to the horrors of the savage warfare that would naturally follow the importation of said Indians.

If these Southern Utes are not dangerous to the people of Colorado, there can be no necessity for their removal to this Territory; on the other hand, if their presence on their existing reservation is fraught with danger to the people of that State, who are better able to restrain them in peace within their present limits, that fact furnishes a cogent reason why they should not be brought into Utah and placed on a wild border, where wholesome restraint or effectual pursuit would be rendered far more difficult.

Your memorialists therefore deprecate and protest against the said proposed measure, which means present dispossession of many white settlers on our eastern border, and ultimately savage war against all white settlements in the valleys of Green River, in the eastern part of Utah, as well as discord, retrogression, and demoralization to the Indians now settled on the Uintah reservation, who are abandoning their tribal organizations and betaking themselves to agricultural and other industries of peace.

Your memorialists, on favorable answer, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

ELIAS A. SMITH,
President of the Council.
W. W. RITER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CALEB W. WEST,
Governor of the Territory of Utah.

CANAL CONNECTING BEAUFORT HARBOR AND NEUSE RIVER AND PAMLICO SOUND.

Mr. SIMMONS, by unanimous consent, presented a petition of 148 citizens of Eastern North Carolina, asking an appropriation to widen and deepen the canal connecting the waters of Beaufort Harbor with those of the Neuse River and Pamlico Sound, giving inland navigation from New York to Beaufort; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizens of the city of New Berne, State of North Carolina, respectfully ask that an appropriation, adequate to the purpose, be made for the deepening and widening the canal connecting the waters of Pamlico Sound and Neuse River with those of Beaufort Harbor, in this State, by which an inland highway for shipping may be established through which coastwise vessels can escape the dangers of Capes Hatteras and Lookout, thus furnishing safe inland communication from New York to Beaufort Harbor by means of the Raritan Canal, the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, Chesapeake Bay, the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal, Albemarle Sound, Pamlico Sound, and the proposed canal, which in time of peace would be a source of pecuniary advantage, and in time of war would be of inestimable value and a means of safety to the United States.

LIME MANUFACTURERS OF KNOX COUNTY, MAINE.

Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of lime manufacturers of Knox County, Maine, asking for an increase of duty on lime to the same rate as that fixed by Canada on that imported from the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers of lime in the county of Knox, State of Maine, do most respectfully and earnestly desire to call your attention to the following important facts relating to and affecting the interest of the people of this and surrounding counties:

The vast beds of limestone in this county opened up an industry in the seaports of Thomaston, Rockland, Rockport, and Lincolnville in the manufacturing of lime, which has existed for over a century. Gradually increasing, it now amounts to a capital invested in kilns, wharves, and storehouses of about $1,000,000; in lime-rock quarries of about $2,000,000, and it is an investment worthless for any other purpose. There is besides a large shipping interest employed in transporting the lime and fuel for burning it. About 2,000,000 casks of lime are annually manufactured and shipped from this county, at a cost, delivered in the markets, of from 90 cents to $1 per cask.

Excepting the rock in the quarry, the fuel and lumber on the stump at an average cost of 6 cents per cask, the whole cost of this article is made up of labor, which includes quarrying the rock, hauling same to kilns, gathering the fuel, making and hauling the lime casks by the inhabitants of the surrounding towns, burning the lime, handling and carrying the same to market.

Before and after the formation of the Dominion of Canada, Nova Scotia was one of our large lime markets, but at or about that time, a duty was imposed on our lime by that government which necessitated the abandonment of that market by us, the said duty still remaining in force. Since the decline in shipbuilding the manufacture of lime is the only industry of any importance at the ports above mentioned, affording as it does employment to a large number of men who have become permanently located here. We therefore deem it of the utmost importance that the Fiftieth Congress take some action to protect this great industry upon which the future of this county depends.

Near St. John, New Brunswick, are vast deposits of limestone, with fuel in abundance and at less than half the cost of the same used here, with labor much cheaper. Within a few years the business of burning lime has been begun and carried on there, and the product largely sent into our markets, namely, to New York alone there were shipped in 1885 less than 5,000 casks; in 1886, 41,000, and in 1887, 138,000 casks, and it is estimated that under the present arrangement 200,000 casks or more will be sent to that market this year.

The difference in the cost of this article here and there at the kiln ready for shipment is about 23 cents per cask in their favor, and there is now a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, or only 3 cents per cask, it being invoiced at 30 cents per cask, which is exclusive of the package.

Under the tariff bill as revised by the Ways and Means Committee we notice lime among the articles placed on the free-list. We therefore most respectfully petition your honorable body to not only remove lime from the free-list, but to impose a specific duty corresponding to that of the Dominion Government.

We further desire to state that we are manufacturing independently, and are not members of any trust or association.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to report back with amendment the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet titles of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, and to ask that the report be printed and the bill and amendments be recommitted.

I deem it not improper to state that a similar motion to that I have just made was presented on the 8th of March during your absence, Mr. Speaker, from this body, and while the House was being presided over by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], as Speaker pro tempore. A point of order was made against the presentation of that report by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] and the point was sustained. In one sense, perhaps, this motion I now make might be regarded as a motion for a new trial; but I prefer to take the ordinary parliamentary course and present the report, being advised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] will present the same question of order he made the other day.

Mr. PARKER. I wish first to make the parliamentary point of order that this having been presented to the Speaker of the House, having been decided by the Speaker of the House, and the Speaker having suggested that it was a question of importance, and would like to have it referred to the House for its decision, that the gentleman disclaimed expressly to take that course, and therefore accepted the decision of the Speaker as the decision of the House. This being the case, I say the gentleman has no standing for a new trial. I should like to have the Chair decide the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman can make the same question of order. Under the circumstances the Chair will not pass on the question of whether it is a question of privilege without careful examination. If the gentleman will let it lie over until to-morrow morning, in the mean time the Chair will investigate the whole question.

Mr. PAYSON. I think some suggestion should be made in reference to it. I should be willing to let the matter go to the Speaker on what I said the other day, as it appears in the RECORD, with what I have said just now.

Mr. ROGERS. I insist the point shall be made in the House.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, when the point was made I occupied the chair in your absence, and had the matter postponed, just as the Speaker does now, with a view to an examination of the bill.

The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois have both had their day in court. The question presented was argued by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] and others. The case was clear. It was decided upon the same principle laid down by the Speaker of the House of Representatives in his decision on last Saturday. I am prepared to justify that decision as good law for the Chair.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is fair that gentlemen representing this favored committee should have the privilege time after time to present these questions, especially after they have been once disposed of; for if it can be done once it can be done a dozen times. It would thus thrust aside all other business. It would give these bills a privilege over other matters pending in Congress of equal dignity and importance. But inasmuch as this question is presented again in its present form, and inasmuch as I, when occupying the chair, made a ruling upon it, and as its presentation now is, at least to a certain extent, a reflection upon the gentleman occupying the chair as Speaker pro tempore at that time, I may forego a certain self-respect and ask to be heard when this point comes up for a final decision by the Chair.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to interrupt him just there?

If he can point to any expression of mine which reflects even indirectly upon him in presenting this question, I will cheerfully disclaim any such intention. No such words can be pointed out.

Mr. COX. I do not refer to any words the gentleman uttered in debate; but the very act of presenting it now is to a certain extent, and for a certain purpose, a reflection. I am not prepared to take any reflections from anybody. I do my own reflecting.

Mr. PAYSON. No one more than myself recognizes the distinguished and eminent ability of the gentleman from New York who occupied the chair as Speaker pro tempore. I recognize that fully; and supplemented as it is by his long parliamentary experience I conceive that his judgment with reference to any matter of parliamentary procedure is unquestionably entitled to great weight. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not concede that it is conclusive upon anybody; and that because the question was raised and was decided, and as he believes justly decided, under the rules of the House—however much we may differ as to the correctness of that ruling—still, under the rules of the House, I do not understand that where there is such a difference of opinion I should be precluded from the right of submitting that question again, under the rules, for a determination by the House; and in presenting it now, as I do, I believe that all gentlemen will concede I am strictly within the rule.

We have the right to take the opinion of whoever is occupying the chair as to the question of the privileged character of the bill unless precluded by the rules. The rules give us that right, and certainly the gentleman has no cause to complain or object if we choose to exercise that right.

I do not object to the gentleman debating the question and sustaining, if he may, the validity of the opinion he delivered as his judgment in this case; and I shall be very glad to meet him in reference to the legal propositions presented by the submission of the report now as well as to-morrow or whenever it comes up for consideration. I think—and I may be permitted to say it without any undue assumption—that I will be able to convince the Speaker, as well as the House, if the opportunity presents itself, that the distinguished gentleman from New York was entirely mistaken in the judgment rendered by him as Speaker pro tempore; and it is not by any means to his discredit, if I may be permitted to say it, for it was simply his judgment of the case as it appeared to him, and while I believe it was an error, yet the gentleman has an equal right with me or any other man to his own opinions. That is all.

Mr. COX. I asked the gentleman from Illinois at the time of the submission of this proposition to take the judgment of the House upon it.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely; and the "gentleman from Illinois" did not choose to do it. That is all.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would ask, what is the regular order?

Mr. WILKINS. I have demanded the regular order, and I claim that this is all out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The title of the bill has not been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILKINS. I now demand the regular order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish it to be understood that my point of order is not waived or reserved, if the gentleman from New York reserves it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from New York as reserving the point of order; but that it was distinctly made.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to reserve the right to make another point of order if the reading of the bill shall develop the fact that other points may be made against it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made by the gentleman from New York; and the Chair thinks that under the circumstances it is only proper to make a careful investigation of the bill before passing upon a point that has been presented and once decided. The Chair will therefore examine the bill and submit a ruling upon the question of order hereafter.

Mr. ROGERS. I only want it understood that I reserve any points of order that may be made.

Mr. PARKER. I wish it to be understood, Mr. Speaker, that the same point that was first presented, in objection to the presentation of the bill, is made now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order is made directly.

The regular order is the call of committees for suspension of the rules.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is stated in the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas an important bill, known as the dependent pension bill, passed the Senate ten days ago; and

Whereas the said bill has not yet been printed and placed in the hands of the proper officer of the House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be requested to inquire and report to the House the cause of the delay in printing said bill and what is necessary to secure the House against such delays in the future.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRACTIONAL SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER called the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WILKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8004) authorizing the issue of fractional silver certificates.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue silver certificates of the denominations of 25, 15, and 10 cents, in such form and design as he may determine, such certificates to be received, redeemed, paid, and reissued in the same manner as silver certificates of larger denominations, and to be exchangeable for silver certificates of other denominations. And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such regulations as may seem to him proper for distributing and redeeming the denominations of silver certificates herein authorized.

Mr. BACON. I demand a second.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BACON. I object.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. WILKINS and Mr. BACON.

Before the count by tellers was completed,

Mr. WEAVER said: I ask unanimous consent that this bill be assigned for a hearing to-morrow, after the consideration hour, for two hours, and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as pending on all amendments and the bill. My proposition includes the offering of amendments. This is an important bill and the House does not seem disposed to give it a second, for the reason that no amendment can be offered. I think if we take it up to-morrow we can dispose of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that instead of two hours one hour be assigned for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask that we may have an hour for debate to-day.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa differs from the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS]. This is a motion to suspend the rules. The gentleman from Iowa suggests that the bill be taken up to-morrow, with an opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I object. The bill can be reached in regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is it in order to call for the yeas and nays on a motion to second?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The tellers completed their count, and reported—ayes 134, noes 32.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] to control the time in support of the measure and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. WEAVER. Before the debate begins I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment pending which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. There can be no amendment pending on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the bill is bad enough and would only be made worse by amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. I object.

Mr. WILKINS. I desire to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DARGAN], who will control the time in support of the bill.

Mr. DARGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended so as to allow thirty minutes debate on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time be extended so as to allow thirty minutes on each side.

Mr. HATCH. That would be taking up the time of other committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DARGAN. This is a very important measure, and I ask unanimous consent that the majority and minority reports be read, the time occupied in their reading not to be deducted from either side.

Mr. HATCH. I object to that.

Mr. DARGAN. I wish to remark first that this is not a bill to force a fractional currency upon the people. By its terms it only authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue upon demand fractional currency in the same manner that silver certificates of larger denominations have heretofore been issued. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if this bill is not acceptable to the people, if there is no desire for this law, this currency will never come into existence.

In order that this may be fully understood I will state that the act of 1878, called the Bland act, authorizes the holder of standard silver dollars to deposit the same in sums not less than $10 with the Treasurer, or any assistant treasurer of the United States, and to receive therefor certificates not less than $10 each, and other certificates of higher denominations corresponding with the notes of the United States.

By the act of 1886 that law was so enlarged as to allow holders presenting not less than $10 of standard silver dollars to receive from the Treasurer therefor certificates of the denominations of one, two, and five dollars.

This bill proposes so to extend that law as to allow the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the receipt of $10 and upward in standard silver dollars, to issue fractional silver certificates of the denominations of 25, 15, and 10 cents. It is therefore only an extension of existing law so as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to issue fractional silver certificates as well as certificates of larger denominations.

The peculiarity and, as your committee think, the excellence of this law—the existing law and the addition proposed to be made to it—is this, that the currency which is created by it comes into existence only at the option of the people.

We are not here, Mr. Speaker, trying by law to force a fractional paper currency upon the people. We only propose to untie the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury and allow persons who desire them, upon the deposit of the standard silver dollars, to procure fractional silver certificates. Therefore if this law amounts to nothing, if nobody desires this currency, then it will never be created. Further, Mr. Speaker, if this bill is enacted into law and the law turns out to be a bad one and works unsatisfactorily, the currency can be retired by the people themselves without the intervention of Congress. All that needs to be done when these silver certificates are shown to be unsatisfactory is for the holders to carry them back to the Secretary of the Treasury, present them, and receive back the silver paid in, and thus the unsatisfactory currency disappears and no harm is done to any one. In short, Mr. Speaker, the question now before the House is this: Will this Congress allow the people of the United States to determine for themselves whether they will have fractional silver certificates? If there proves to be any harm in this currency, if it is unsatisfactory, it can be withdrawn in the manner already stated. If it does not commend itself to the approval of the people it will be rejected.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DARGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MACDONALD. What view does the Treasury Department take of this bill?

Mr. DARGAN. The Treasury Department is opposed to it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not go into an examination of the objections which are made to this bill. The object of the bill is not to supplant the fractional coin now in existence, but to supplement it. This is a bill which is demanded by the people living in the country and in small towns who wish to have the advantage of trading with the great money centers and getting their commodities on the best terms possible. This is not, as has been alleged, a step backward; on the contrary, it is a step forward. On account of the extraordinary development of our mail system, by which goods are transported rapidly from one point to another, a very large retail trade has sprung up which is carried on through the mails, and we have no currency suitable for the transaction of that class of business. Now, it is the duty of Congress, as we hold, having assumed control of this matter, to permit the people to have such currency as will enable them to carry on to the best advantage any business transactions in which they are engaged.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He claims that this is for the purpose of supplementing the subsidiary coin. If so, why do you base this proposed currency, not upon the subsidiary coin, but upon the monthly purchases of bullion, or certificates already issued, thus taking it clear out of the range of the subsidiary coin?

Mr. DARGAN. There are now two hundred and fourteen millions of silver dollars in the Treasury lying there unused, outside of the silver certificates——

Mr. DINGLEY. There are only forty-seven millions unused. The remainder is represented by outstanding certificates.

Mr. DARGAN. Yes; I stand corrected. There will be only twenty-five millions of this currency, as we understand. But, however that may be——

Mr. BLAND. Upon what do you base your statement as to twenty-five millions?

Mr. DARGAN. That is a supposition, a speculation. But I wish to say in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that if he is so much in favor of the liberty and the rights of the people, all that this bill proposes is to allow the people to do as they please about this matter.

Mr. FELTON. On what basis does the bill propose to place the issue of these certificates? The bill does not say.

Mr. DARGAN. They are to be issued in the same manner as other silver certificates.

Mr. FELTON. But on what deposits?

Mr. DARGAN. The former law says $10 of standard silver dollars and upwards.

Mr. FELTON. This bill does not say so.

Mr. DARGAN. The Bland bill of 1878 says in sums not less than $10.

Mr. FELTON. What I want to know is on what basis this currency is to be issued.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DARGAN. My time is so short that I am compelled to decline.

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has time of his own.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a question, as I have no time?

Mr. DARGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the main purpose of this bill can not be achieved by an extension of the law authorizing the issue of postal-notes?

Mr. DARGAN. I should say not. In the first place, it is often troublesome and inconvenient to get those notes, and there is only a very small percentage of the post-offices of this country that issue them.

Mr. ADAMS. Make them easier to get.

Mr. DARGAN. Besides, it is frequently difficult to get to those offices, and it costs time and money to get the notes. I do not think the need can be supplied in that way. There is too much friction and delay in the postal-note system.

Mr. STEELE. I will ask the gentleman a question. As I understand him, he says that the acceptance of this currency rests with the people under this bill.

Mr. DARGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. Take, for instance, the case of a bank out in Omaha. It would cost to express silver to Omaha four dollars and a half a thousand, while to express fractional currency or silver certificates to Omaha would cost only fifty cents a thousand. The banker out there would of course prefer to get his currency as cheaply as he could, and he would get it in this way, and if you made these notes a legal tender what remedy would the people have if they did not want them?

Mr. DARGAN. The Government pays all the expense of carrying the currency.

Mr. STEELE. If they wish to get it back to the Treasury how will they do it?

Mr. DARGAN. The people of Omaha must decide that themselves. If they do not want it they need not take it.

Mr. WEAVER. The bill makes no provision that this fractional currency shall be issued, and I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact.

Mr. DARGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa for a question only.

Mr. WEAVER. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will permit me to answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa. The bill, as it is printed, provides that such certificates be received, redeemed, and paid and reissued in the same manner as silver certificates of larger denomination, and to be exchangable for silver certificates of other denominations. There is nothing about how they shall be issued.

Mr. WILKINS. Their issue was dropped out in the printed bill.

Mr. WEAVER. It should be in.

Mr. WILKINS. Yes, it should be put in. I ask that the word "issued" be inserted in the bill, as its omission is a misprint. It is in the original bill and should be in the printed bill. I do not suppose there will be any objection to having the word inserted in the printed bill.

Mr. DARGAN. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks to insert the word "issued" as he has indicated; is there objection?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, I object.

Mr. WILKINS. It is a typographical error. I raise the point of order that if the original bill contained that word, I submit that it is now there whether it is in the printed bill or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If it turns out on examination the original bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency contained the word indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, it does not require unanimous consent to be inserted in the bill. If it is in the original bill, that is all that is necessary, as that is the bill upon which the House is acting.

Mr. BRUMM. I should like to have the text of the original bill read.

Mr. BACON. As a parliamentary inquiry I should like to know how the House is to be informed what the original bill is. This bill here and the one printed in the newspapers are the same.

Mr. BRUMM. Let us have the bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes the original bill is still in the hands of the Public Printer.

Mr. BLOUNT. The question is whether the bill examined by the committee and reported to the House contained the word indicated.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not competent to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the word "issued" inserted? If so, let the gentleman make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, if the gentleman from Ohio had made that motion in the beginning it would have been in order, but the motion has been already submitted and debated, and it is not now in order to modify that motion, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRUMM. There is a manifest error in the bill by the omission of the word "issued." Now, can not the mover of the motion so modify his motion as to correct that error?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There can not be any modification of the motion after the House has entered on the consideration of the matter.

Mr. BACON. I rise to make this explanation. When this bill was presented to the Committee on Banking and Currency I presented the views I entertained against its report. It was then asked that certain words should be stricken out and the bill should be reported without them, and, as I recollect, amongst the words stricken out was the word "issued." I may be wrong, but that is my recollection.

Mr. RANDALL. Can not the original bill be produced?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The difficulty is, it can not be produced in time, as it is in the hands of the Public Printer.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. BAYNE. I can not hear what is going on.

Mr. ENLOE. Would it not be practicable within the time allowed for the decision of this question to telephone to the Public Printer and have the original bill brought here?

Mr. WILKINS. It might be. But I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] will withdraw his objection to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; I insist on my objection. The word was struck out in committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is a mistake; the word was never struck out in committee.

Mr. WILKINS. Never in the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] is now entitled to control the time in opposition to the pending proposition. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DARGAN] has reserved the remainder of his time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What bill are we to vote on, the original bill or the bill which has been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill which has been read at the Clerk's desk, the bill presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BACON. That is the printed bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill which was read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I wrote out and submitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency a paper, which was subsequently presented to the House and printed as the "views of the minority" of the committee, which seems to me a fair and concise statement of the objections to this bill. Those objections were submitted to the committee in advance of the preparation of the majority report, and I think an examination of that report will demonstrate that it is principally devoted to answering the suggestions contained in the views which I submitted, and in which I took the ground that there was no general demand for this currency and no public necessity for the passage of this bill.

For myself, I desire to say that I have received but one communication advocating the passage of this bill. That there is a general desire for the measure I do not know, except so far as I am informed by the correspondence contained in the report itself and by a letter which I hold in my hand—a letter which I think explains whatever demand may be claimed to exist for the passage of the bill. This letter was written from Springfield, Mass., on the 8th of March, 1888, by a gentleman whom I will not name for reasons which will be obvious to the House. This letter is upon paper ornamented by a very elaborate printed heading, giving the title "The United States Postal Improvement Association. Membership fee, $5." Then follows a list of the officers, and they consist of the editor of a paper in Chicago, the editor of a child's paper at Boston, a lecturer of the National Grange from New Jersey, the editor of an agricultural paper at Springfield, Ohio, the president of the Farmers' Alliance of Cameron, Tex., the president of the Society of American Florists, the agricultural editor of two agricultural papers, the chairman of the American Seed Trade Association, and the chairman of the American Nurserymen's Association. On the reverse of this page is printed the "constitution of the United States Postal Improvement Association," and it asserts that the objects of this association are to induce such legislation as will bring about a reduction of postage on seeds, etc., a reissue of fractional currency, the abolition of postal-notes, and a reduction of the cost of postal money-orders. Then follows this, which I think will interest the House:

(Please write a letter something like this to your Representative and also to your Senator in Congress, who may be addressed either at their home or simply by name at Washington, D. C.)

Hon. ——— ———:

DEAR SIR: I wish you would help in the movement to secure—

1. Reduced postage on seeds, plants, and bulbs.
2. The reissue of fractional currency for use in the mails.
3. Abolition of postal-notes.
4. Issue of money-orders for $5 or less for a fee of 3 cents.

Then comes this paragraph as to fractional currency:

2. As to fractional currency, we need it for a thousand and one daily uses. Whether it be issued as greenbacks or as silver or gold certificates, I do not care much so long as the Government is behind it. I want it particularly for sending in the mails. The postal-note does not accommodate us. It is no safer than fractional currency, is expensive, exceedingly inconvenient to get or to collect, and is issued only at money-order offices. Now, as only 14 per cent. of the post-offices issue money-orders or postal-notes, and these only at important centers, you will see that the people remote from these centers who most need the conveniences have no way of sending money by mail except in postage-stamps or bulky silver. Stamps were not made for this purpose and are not negotiable. Silver is too unsafe. Therefore, give us a fractional currency and abolish the postal-notes.

[Suggestion: The above is merely a model. Alter it to suit your views. Add points of local interest to your Congressman. Impress upon him the fact that these objects are demanded by the men whose votes elected him. Write at once. Do not delay. Get others to do likewise. If you want to help the cause still further, address Secretary United States Postal Improvement Association for particulars.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this little communication, put forth by an association formed by the editors of agricultural papers and gentlemen who sell to the country seeds—an association with an admission fee of $5—seems to me to account for most of what has come to members of this body, if anything has come, with reference to this matter. The fact seems to be simply that this agency, seeking to produce a public opinion, has scattered these blanks over the country, and every man who has received one, thinking he ought to write to his Congressman, has copied this letter and sent it to him. That is how these communications come here.

This is a very impressive letter. It is so impressive that if gentlemen of this House will examine the report in this case they will find that a very considerable portion of this letter is embodied in the report itself—not merely the ideas, but the language. I ask the House to consider whether this supposed public sentiment is not the result of the impressiveness of this letter, which so far impressed the majority of this committee that they have embodied it in their report and put it upon the records of this House.

I wish further to call the attention of the House to the fact that this letter contains two statements which are of some importance. First, it is stated that it is desired that about $25,000,000 in fractional currency be reissued. Do gentlemen recall the fact that the subsidiary coinage of this country to-day amounts to about $75,000,000 or $76,000,000, and that only $50,000,000 of it is floated, the balance being at all times in the Treasury an unavailable asset? Is this House prepared to say that it is wise or just legislation to remove that subsidiary coin and substitute in its place $25,000,000 of paper? Gentlemen say the people are not obliged to take it unless they want it. Let us examine that a moment. The gentleman who addressed an inquiry to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DARGAN] met and answered that suggestion. It is cheaper for the banks and the points from which money is circulated to get the paper than the silver, and the people will have the paper whether they will or won't; because the men who furnish the circulation will furnish up that which is the cheapest for them and put it into the hands of the people regardless of their interests, wishes, or comfort.

Now, sir, another serious objection, it seems to me, with regard to this matter, is the item of expense to the Government. The annual report of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing informs this House that it is almost impossible for it, conveniently, to do the work called for by existing law with its present accommodations. I have addressed to the chief of that bureau a letter asking for an estimate of what the expense of the additional plant, room, and labor would be. I hold in my hand his letter, dated this day, in answer to that.

I asked:

What addition to the force of your bureau will the issuing of the proposed fractional currency require?

He answers:

If the work is done by hand, 280 persons; if done by the steam press, 230 persons.

I asked:

What will be the cost of preparing that amount of fractional currency?

He answers:

Three hundred and eighty thousand dollars if the printing be done by hand, and $350,000 if the printing be done partly by hand and partly by steam.

Mr. DINGLEY. How much is the amount on which his estimate is based?

Mr. BACON. The amount estimated for by the gentleman engaged in improving the currency of this country, and the postal laws as well, is $25,000,000.

Taking that as the estimate, and I assume that the committee did not accept one part of this gentleman's letter of suggestions and not the rest, but if they adopt his reasons they adopt also the measure he gives as the amount needed for this purpose.

I asked the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing the question:

What additional building would be required?

He answers:

An estimate of $80,000 has been made by the office of the Supervising Architect for the extension of this building for another purpose; and it is believed such an extension would afford ample room.

I asked:

What additional plant will be required?

He answered that an expenditure of $35,000 would supply the additional plant.

Now, I ask, Mr. Speaker, when this matter comes before the House, obviously as the result of the inquiry and urgency of a single or at most two classes of individuals, will the House reissue this paper currency and put the additional burden upon the Treasury of this country? Is there reason for it? Is there sufficient advantage to be derived from it to justify such an expenditure?

But not only is the currency expensive to make, but it is a currency which is expensive to keep in circulation. I inquired of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing the average life of the fractional note, and received in response the reply that it was one year and one month. I asked what the average life of the other notes was; and the answer was four and one-fifth years for all notes above $1. So that, if the $25,000,000 is to be issued, every one and one-half years $383,000 of additional expense must be saddled upon the Treasury of the United States to keep it in circulation.

But, sir, that is not all. The Government of the United States has unquestionably to-day in operation a system which will perfectly and fully supply this alleged want—the system of postal-notes. It has been said that that system has not been sufficiently extensive. That is true, sir; but under the laws passed by the Forty-ninth Congress it has been extended 51 per cent. in the past year, and under laws, as the Postmaster-General reports, now in existence the increase of the postal-notes and the frequency of their use will be very greatly extended. So that there is no necessity nor public use for the creation of this currency.

That, in addition to what I have said in my report, is all I desire to present at this time in opposition to this bill.

The undersigned, member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, respectfully dissents from the report of the majority of that committee whereby they recommend the passage of a bill as a substitute for H. R. 6140, to authorize the issue of fractional silver certificates, and recommend that said bill do not pass, but the same lie upon the table.

I do not understand that the demand for any such form of currency is claimed to be general, much less universal. The claim is that in certain kinds of business the proposed fractional certificate would be a convenience.

Waiving the question whether legislation exclusively for the convenience of any one or two kinds of business is proper, it is entirely obvious that it is improper either where there is any general principle of which it is a violation or where expense to the general public is occasioned thereby more than commensurate to the private advantage, or where there is a loss likely to result therefrom to the general public or to any other class.

The expense of issuing these fractional certificates will necessarily be very large. The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving for the past year, and his estimate of expenses of that bureau for the next year, inform us that that bureau, now being in a condition of high efficiency, is already hampered for room and will be taxed to its utmost capacity to prepare and issue, as required by the public demand, the various securities, bills, and stamps in the next fiscal year, as the amount has been ascertained from the estimates of the respective bureaus of the Treasury Department.

The addition to the work of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving by the making of the proposed fractional certificates, as authorized by this bill, will therefore require additional or new buildings for that bureau, additional machinery, and additional labor.

The cost of these necessary additions to be paid for out of the general Treasury seems to me to be largely in excess of any advantage to the particular classes asking for this legislation.

The return to the use of the subsidiary coin in place of the former fractional currency was accompanied by such general expressions of gratification from all parts of this country as could only have been occasioned by a very general sense of the inconvenience and loss arising from the use of that currency.

Fifteen million three hundred thousand dollars, in round numbers, of that currency remained unredeemed on July 1, 1887, eleven years after the last issue of it ceased.

The loss may be presumed to have been generally distributed, but fell heaviest upon the laboring classes, and any loss in the proposed currency will certainly be distributed in the same way. Unless the use of this currency can be made so general as to make it certain that the division of the loss upon it will be generally distributed it is impossible to see how it can supply the asserted demand for a paper currency of such denomination as will facilitate the settlement by mail of small transactions.

Its general use seems to me a prerequisite to its getting to the remoter and less accessible parts of the country, where it is claimed to be really needed. If it is to be generally used, then it must displace just so much of the subsidiary coin.

The subsidiary coinage is now beyond the needs of the country, nearly one-third of it being constantly in the Treasury, despite the best efforts of the Government to keep it in circulation.

The loss, by destruction of the currency, to the people, is a gain to the Treasury. The Treasury can not make any gain in this way except by an equal loss to the people. It will not be seriously contended that the Government should issue a currency for the intended or with the foreseen result of making a profit out of the citizen by means of the destruction of such currency.

The subsidiary coin being paid into the Treasury for fractional silver certificates reissued, these certificates are by the terms of this law exchangeable for other silver certificates payable in silver dollars.

When this latter class of certificates are presented, silver dollars must be paid from the Treasury, and the subsidiary coin remains therein. From what fund all the remaining silver certificates issued for silver dollars deposited in the Treasury, and some of which have been paid out in the process above described, are to be paid this bill does not provide, as I comprehend it.

The holders of such as may be left after the silver dollars are all paid out can not be compelled to take the subsidiary coin. As the subsidiary coin is not of proportional weight with the silver dollar, and hence a dollar of it not of intrinsically equal value, it is not difficult to see that there is held out an inducement which may on an occasion lead men desirous and capable of speculating to load down the Treasury with the intrinsically less valuable and deprive it of the intrinsically more valuable coin.

It is not to be forgotten that one of the evils which grew to large and generous proportions in connection with the issue of fractional currency from 1862 to 1876 by the Federal Government was the forging of this kind of currency. Its small value and frequent use made forging of it comparatively simple and safe.

The loss from this cause of course fell heaviest upon the laboring classes, from education, habit, and necessity least observant of the quality of the currency they receive.

The same result is certain, as it seems to me, to follow a return to its use.

These reasons for my dissent are based upon the views I entertain of the expediency and effect of the proposed legislation. There remains to be stated a reason which rests upon broader and more fundamental grounds.

It seems to me that the proposed bill is violative of what I believe to be the sound general principle that the Treasury of the United States should not become a bank of deposit for the money of private individuals, nor issue its negotiable certificates of deposit to its depositors.

It was never contemplated, in my opinion, by the framers of the Constitution that the Treasury should occupy any such relation either to private individuals or to the general business of the country.

I am not unaware that in later years this theory of the province of the Treasury has been frequently set aside. Yet as one who believes in the necessity of a return to the older and, as it seems to me, sounder views of the constitutional relations of the Federal Government to the citizens of the country, I can not concur in recommending the passage of any legislation which tends to extend these violations of what seems to me sound doctrine.

HENRY BACON.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] for five minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is objectionable because it is in the interest of a class. It may benefit that class. It may prove of convenience to that class, but it would prove of inconvenience to all the other people of the country.

No one here can recall the days when we had fractional paper currency without remembering that it was very inconvenient in many cases; that the notes became chafed, that they became mutilated and soiled, and after passing from hand to hand many of them became utterly unfit for use. These were palmed off upon ignorant persons, while the sharp and smart fellows refused to receive them, and many a man has torn a note up and thrown it away rather than go to the Treasury Department or to the United States depository for the purpose of having it redeemed. The loss to our country, as shown by statistics, by the use of that fractional currency amounts to about $15,000,000; and it is not improbable, if the silver fractional certificates will be used, that a like loss will result from their introduction.

Now, sir, I say it is unfair on the part of the Government, it is dishonest on the part of the Government, to put into existence a system of currency which will thus result to the people of the country. It is not an honest, fair, decent way of doing business.

There is another objection to it, Mr. Speaker. It is this: There are now hoarded in the Treasury of the United States about $215,000,000 of silver. About one hundred and sixty or one hundred and seventy millions of that money are there on the basis of silver certificates having been issued, and the other forty-five or fifty millions are lying there in the Treasury the property exclusively of the United States; and the effect of the enactment of this law would be to drive still further into the Treasury of the United States the subsidiary coin of the country and lodge side by side with the legal-tender dollars that are now in the Treasury the subsidiary coin which is handled from day to day and used in the daily transactions of life.

I conceive it was a violent departure from the principles of the fathers and from the rules laid down in the Constitution of the United States when the Supreme Court of the United States held that greenbacks were a legal tender, especially after the war necessity had ended, and when there was nothing to base them upon except the authority conferred by the Constitution. I see in the issue of these silver certificates here proposed and in the issue of the silver certificates that are gone before a continuation of that departure and an effort to practically put into use a paper currency instead of retaining in use a subsidiary coin or a gold and silver coin for the wants of the people in their business transactions.

I regard this as a dangerous innovation. I look upon laws as a growth, as everything else grows and develops; and I think this tendency has grown and developed, and is about to culminate, if this measure becomes a law, in a system which will be injurious to the people of this country from one end of it to the other.

I hope this measure will be defeated, and that the already large amount of silver in the Treasury of the United States will not be still further increased by the enactment of such a law as this.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BACON. I called the attention of the House to the letter I received and the circular printed on the back of it to make plain the ground on which I based the assertion in my minority report that there was no general demand for this measure, that it was simply a demand created by the ingenious gentleman who got up this circular. It has no more resemblance to a general public demand than the tin thunder of a theater has to the thunder in the clouds.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Without committing myself to the proposition of issuing fractional paper money of any kind, there are other features of this bill to which I seriously object.

My personal recollection of this fractional paper does not recommend it to me. I remember when it was in use that sometimes, in trying to separate it after it had been wadded together and sweated over in the pocket-book, it would tear to pieces, 25 or 50 cents of it, and it would take longer to piece and paste it together than the time it would take me to make that amount of money. I think fifteen millions of it perished, there being a total loss to the people of that amount.

Mr. DUNN. Besides the loss by counterfeiting.

Mr. BLAND. As the gentleman from Arkansas says, it was constantly counterfeited, and the counterfeit and the genuine passed all alike.

I might, however, yield those personal objections if I thought there was a universal demand, or a demand we ought to heed, for the issue of this paper money. If I thought so, I might not interpose my objection to a proper bill for that purpose. But what is this bill? In the first place, it is very difficult to determine what the bill means. There is one thing certain about it, and that is it changes the whole system of our currency.

The subsidiary silver coin, the 50 cents, the 25 cents, and the dimes, has not the same quantity of silver as the legal-tender silver dollar has; and it is a legal tender for only $10. It has been issued to the extent of about $70,000,000, and about twenty-five millions of that issue are piled up in the Treasury and not in circulation.

This bill does not propose to issue the subsidiary paper or the subsidiary coin at all; and there is this fundamental objection to it as a measure, that it proposes to convert the monthly purchase of bullion for the purpose of issuing this fractional currency, instead of basing it on the subsidiary coin in the Treasury.

Now, what would be the effect of it? We have to-day twenty-five millions, or sometimes as high as thirty millions, of this subsidiary silver in the Treasury, and never less than twenty-five millions that is not in circulation at all. It is counted as an unavailable asset in the Treasury balance. Now, this bill proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited power to do what? To convert silver certificates issued under the law of 1878 on the silver dollar into subsidiary silver paper, to the amount of seventy millions.

Give him that power and you will have seventy millions of subsidiary silver on the Treasury books as unavailable assets, because as you get out this paper the coin returns and this takes its place, and the whole subsidiary coinage, amounting to $70.000,000, together with the trade-dollar, amounting to nearly one hundred millions, will be piled up in the Treasury as unavailable dead capital, and this paper is to be issued on the monthly coinage and monthly purchase of bullion. I say, Mr. Speaker, it will contract the currency, and instead of the people having a currency that is convenient, as the subsidiary silver coinage is, they will have torn, mutilated, pasted, dirty paper, which will be issued for the purpose of contracting the currency, and nothing else. It is questionable whether, under the provisions of this bill, the Secretary of the Treasury may not convert the whole of our silver coinage into fractional paper, to be a legal tender for only $10, and thus defeat the purpose of remonetizing silver.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BACON. I yield four minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I will say in three minutes, very briefly, what occurs to me on this subject. I happened to be chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in June, 1876, and reported a bill which had been introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and referred to that committee, providing for the issue of twenty millions of subsidiary coinage in the place of the old, rotten, small-pox fractional paper currency. We got rid of that currency, and it was a good riddance; not merely because it was old and unpleasant and contagious, but also on economic grounds. I remember it was argued by some gentlemen at that time, on both sides of the Chamber I think, that the small fractional paper currency was lost or destroyed at the rate of some ten or twelve million dollars per annum, while the silver would not be lost, and that therefore, by retaining the fractional paper currency, the Treasury would gain by the people's loss, forgetting, of course, in the argumentation, that the people were really the Government, and that the people, and especially the poor people, would be the real sufferers. Well, sir, Congress almost unanimously passed that bill for the subsidiary silver coinage. It was a bill intended to conform to the usages of all nations and of all ages, for no nation undertakes to get rid of silver for its subsidiary coin. From the time of Abraham down to the present, in all the countries of Europe and of the Old World generally, the old white coin has remained in use for change and is found to be indispensable. If we want change of another kind for purposes of transmission through the mails, it is easily obtained. We have it already in our postal-notes and postage-stamps, and if we want more we can easily get it without bringing back upon our people that pestiferous thing, the shinplaster of the past.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not been able to hear a popular clamor for the enactment of such a law as this. I do not believe any such clamor exists. I happened to be here in 1876 when there was a real demand for the extinguishment of the fractional paper currency and for the substitution in its stead of subsidiary silver coin for the purpose of carrying on the retail business of the country; and, whether there is any clamor for this or not, in my judgment there is no necessity for it, because the report presented to us by the committee shows that there is now afloat a sufficient subsidiary coinage to meet the demands of business. The report of the committee shows that there is yet twenty-seven millions of coin of that character remaining in the Treasury. It also tells us that between the 30th of June, 1886, and the 30th of June, 1887, one year, this circulation had increased $2,000,000, showing that it was increasing from natural business causes and ought not to be interfered with in the manner proposed. Now, what has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], in not altogether refined language [laughter], I repeat. There was $368,000,000 of this fractional currency issued, and the final result is that the people of the United States have been mulcted to the extent of fifteen millions by that kind of money.

Mr. DARGAN. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina has thirteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DARGAN. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill provides for the issue of fractional silver certificates in denominations of 10, 15, and 25 cents, to be issued, paid, and exchanged in the same manner and received for the same purposes as the $1 and $2 silver certificates.

The amount to be issued will depend entirely on the demand for them, in the same way as the amount of issues of other silver certificates is determined. The only limit is that in no case can the issues of all denominations of silver certificates be larger in the aggregate than the whole number of silver dollars that have been coined. If but few fractional silver certificates are demanded by the public, but few will be issued. If ten, fifteen, or even twenty or more millions are required in fractional denominations, then they will be issued.

Inasmuch as on March 1 there were over forty-seven million of standard silver dollars in the Treasury against which no certificates were outstanding, not to mention the monthly coinage of over two millions, there is an abundant basis for the issue of fractional denominations to meet the wants of business. To whatever extent the fractional silver certificates go into use, therefore, they will utilize the unused silver dollars in the Treasury.

I favor the issue of such fractional silver certificates because I believe they will prove a great convenience in the transaction of the large and increasing volume of business done by means of orders sent through the mails by individual citizens removed from the commercial centers and points of distribution. Not only does this include extensive special business enterprises like those conducted by seedsmen, publishers, booksellers, notions, etc., but to a large extent farmers and other citizens obtain special articles not usually found in rural sections of the country by sending orders and making remittances, usually requiring fractional sums, through the mails.

The large numbers of letters and memorials from Grangers, farmers, and residents of rural communities, asking for the passage of this bill, attest not only the existence of a wide demand for such a currency as this bill proposes but also a conviction wide and deep in the farming communities of the country that it is the duty of the Government to meet this want.

The information which the committee have received shows clearly that the growth of the kind of business which demands a convenient fractional currency for transmission through the mails has been unexampled within a few years. The money-order and postal-note, inconvenient and expensive for small sums, can be obtained only at one out of eight post-offices in the country, and the people therefore have been obliged to resort to heavy and unsafe coin, and postage stamps, which in warm and damp weather have been handled with difficulty and usually with loss.

Four objections have been made to supplying this admitted public convenience and necessity—objections which seem to me to have little force when compared with the great advantages gained.

First. It is said that these fractional silver certificates will drive fractional silver out of circulation. There is no good ground for this suggestion. Fractional silver as pocket coin will maintain its place. If we had any doubt of this, our fears have been dispelled by the trial which Canada has given to an issue of fractional paper currency to supplement her fractional silver. The result has been that fractional silver has maintained its usual circulation as change for the hand-to-hand transactions of the people of Canada, while the fractional paper has been mainly used for those business transactions where parts of a dollar were needed for transmission by mail. As such it has proved a convenience in Canada. In this country, where such transactions are proportionately much more numerous, such fractional certificates will prove a great boon.

Second. It is objected that it is a very expensive currency to the people on account of the wear and destruction of the paper. It is pointed out that of the three hundred and sixty-odd millions of fractional currency issued by the Government between 1862 and 1876, to maintain a maximum circulation of seventy-five millions, over fifteen millions have never been presented for redemption, and it is claimed that this amount has been lost.

As a matter of fact a large proportion of these fractional notes which have never been presented for redemption are still in the hands of the people, carefully preserved as curiosities of the war. A considerable amount was kept by banks and business men for use in transmission by mail. It is doubtful if the actual loss was a third of the apparent amount missing, and that was largely due to the neglect of the people in the flush times of the war to preserve for redemption mutilated notes. Besides, it should be borne in mind that this fractional paper currency was, during the war period and up to 1876, the only money which the people had for hand-to-hand uses in denominations less than a dollar, and that the loss by mutilation must be much greater when such a currency is used as pocket change than when it is used for transmission by mail. With such appropriate regulations for distribution and redemption as this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make, there is no reason why the loss to the people in using fractional certificates should be greater than in the use of $1 and $2 certificates. It is not believed that the expense of these is much, if any, greater than in the use of coin.

Third. It is said that the people rejoiced when fractional silver came in in 1876 to take the place of fractional paper, and therefore it is assumed that there is no desire now for the issue proposed by this bill.

But it should be borne in mind that the popular satisfaction at the return to fractional silver had reference partly to the fact that it was the inception of a return to specie payments and a currency at par with coin, and partly to the fact that for ordinary pocket change the people preferred silver. For this use they prefer it now. But hardly had we withdrawn the fractional paper before it began to be seen that it had a useful end to subserve for transmission through the mails. The postal-note was an effort to meet a want which the withdrawal of the fractional paper disclosed, but it has necessarily proved insufficient. And with the large increase of the kinds of business which demand a convenient currency for transmission through the mails the demand from our rural population for such an issue as is proposed by this bill is too general to be resisted, especially when there is no substantial reason for withholding it.

Fourth. It is finally urged that the expense to the Government will be so great in issuing it as to more than offset the advantages of the issue. Somber pictures of an overloaded Bureau of Engraving and heavy expenditures in constructing new buildings to hold machinery enough to print a few millions of fractional certificates are presented to the House.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DARGAN] has so thoroughly shown the groundlessness of this objection that I need not dwell on it. Our Government, which, with a mighty war on its hands, found no difficulty in printing hundreds of millions more of bonds, Treasury notes, fractional notes, and bank-notes than are now desired, will have no difficulty in printing a few millions of fractional certificates.

It is strange that gentlemen who saw no difficulty or expense in printing gold certificates, or even the many millions of $1 and $2 silver certificates authorized by the last Congress, should now discover so great expense in printing a few millions of fractional silver certificates.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the bill will receive the necessary two-thirds vote, and thus the requests which are coming up to us from the farmers and rural communities of this country for a currency which can be conveniently and economically used for transmission through the mails in sums of less than $1 will receive a favorable response from Congress.

Mr. COX. In order to avoid the reproach of inelegance, to which my facetious friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] subjected my limited and hurried remarks, I ask to add a paragraph or so from the debate of June 10, 1876 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, first session Forty-fourth Congress), when the respective utilities of the paper change and the subsidiary coinage were compared:

Why, then, should we discriminate in our legislation against silver, a product of our own land? It is a product, like wheat. It costs to get it. Its beauty and brilliancy are inferior to no metal. Softer than copper, harder than gold, its malleability makes it a medium, and our organic law regards it as a legal medium of exchange. Its very ductility gives it a quality as wonderful as that of any metal. It may be drawn out into wires finer than hair. A grain of it may be extended by the genius of mechanism 400 feet in length. Its tenacity is not less remarkable. Its alloy with copper by fusion not only makes it harder, but gives it a ringing sonorousness which is beginning to make music in the pockets of the million. It may be too heavy for lazy effeminacy, but it is none the less precious when jingled in the hand of toil. Our Government has fixed its standard, as have Britain, Austria, and France. Let us maintain it as our fathers advanced it, above and out of the slough of the Continental currency.

This white metal is not a new coin. I have seen its old mines in Cartagena, which were once worked by Spanish slaves under Roman masters, as Peru and Mexico have worked their mines under Spanish mastery. The ancients used silver for coin, and made the coin unalloyed. Hungary, Saxony, Norway, and Asiatic Russia have had and yet have their mines of silver; but all nations, ancient and modern, fall in its production in comparison with our own mining miracles. The stories of Monte Cristo and the fables of Aladdin and the Orient do not touch the realities of Nevada with its incalculable bonanzas.

In our present emergencies, and when the bulk of the currency of our country is provincial paper, when it is, therefore, non-exportable, when it is neither the standard of wages nor prices, when it is not the legal tender which industry deserves or the Constitution contemplates, is it not a heroic and wise movement towards honest money to prepare with caution and receive with prudence this remarkable metal placed by Providence within the bosom of the earth, to be delved after as a factor in the exchanges of our enterprising country and busy world? Well might the Psalmist exclaim, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works! In wisdom hast Thou made them all. The earth is full of Thy riches!"

Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few observations in reference to the minority report, which states in brief that there is no general demand for the issue of fractional currency. The evidence before the subcommittee that prepared the bill was that there is a general demand for it. Newspapers all over the country have favored it; letters and petitions from various sections have been received in its favor, and from people in every walk of life. We can, therefore, reasonably say that there is a wide and general demand for the passage of the bill.

Any one can see why there should be a demand for such a currency to be used in the mails. Only 14 per cent. of our people live where they are able to obtain postal money-orders; 86 per cent. of our people are therefore without this privilege, and if they have remittances to make are compelled to use postage-stamps or subsidiary coin. No one will contend that these were intended to be used for such a purpose, and when they are so used it is to the inconvenience and loss of those using them.

It strikes me that when 86 per cent. of our people are driven to the use of stamps and silver, which are unsafe and unfit for the purpose of transmission through the mails, no one can deny that fractional currency would be a great convenience for such a purpose.

It is also assumed in the minority report that the $15,300,000 of fractional currency now outstanding of the old issues is lost, but I am sure that it must be within the knowledge of every member on this floor that large amounts have been retained by the people as souvenirs of the times in which it was issued and for use in the mails.

It may be that the subsidiary coinage is already more than the country needs, but that is not the question here. The question is, shall we give the people a convenient and safe currency with which to make small remittances through the mails? To my mind it seems an imposition to longer deprive them of it and compel them to use an inconvenient and unfit medium for this purpose.

Mr. DARGAN. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS].

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that they will be shinplasters. There is no doubt that we have all learned to hate and despise shinplasters. We hated them because a disagreeable necessity forced them upon us. We despised them because they were fraud, they were not worth their face, and they were not redeemable in coin. But these objections died with the war. They will not exist to plague this new issue of fractional currency. But there are other objections that will. I will be frank in that admission.

These certificates will cost a good deal to manufacture. Many of them will be torn; all of them will be dirty. Many of them will be lost in the hands of the people. They will add twenty-five millions to our paper currency.

But all these objections have been, I think, exaggerated. We exaggerate them, naturally, under our prejudices against the shinplaster.

Grant that the loss is great. If the loss be equally distributed and not confined to a single class, what the individual citizen loses out of his pocket he finds in the United States Treasury, in which he has a pro-rata interest. And I believe that the rich man is as careless in handling that kind of money as the poor man.

Grant that the certificate gets quickly torn or soiled. Measures will soon be devised by the Secretary of the Treasury, to whose power it is committed, to facilitate the exchange. The banks will assist. If they do not, public opinion will force them promptly to do so, that the mutilated or dirty certificate shall be promptly exchanged for one that is clean and crisp.

New arrangements and machinery will diminish in time the cost of its production, just as has been the case in the production of our United States notes.

Where there are hundreds of millions of paper money out, to the exclusion of the coin it represents, the addition of twenty-five millions to that amount is not a serious objection. Now, against these objections weigh the wishes of those who use seven-eighths of the post-offices of the country. They want a currency which they can use in the mails whenever they want to buy any article that is worth less than a dollar. They can not go to a post-office for a money-order.

The gentleman who lives in Philadelphia [Mr. RANDALL] may not want it, nor the gentleman from Pittsburgh [Mr. BAYNE], nor the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who lives by a money-order office, nor the gentleman [Mr. BACON] who lives in a city of New York; but the farmers who are scattered over the country do, and those who live in small villages. To these it is almost a necessity. And as for those who live near money-order offices, why these gentlemen themselves must think their time of little value if, when they want to buy 25 cents' worth of anything not found in their vicinage, they prefer to walk to the post-office and there enter into a written contract with the United States Government, and this to expend a quarter of a dollar. [Laughter.]

I want to vote for the farmers, the class that need this accommodation. There are plenty to speak and work for the laborers of cities. Hundreds of organizations look to their rights—Knights of Labor and brotherhoods of every name. But the scattered farmers, the dwellers in little villages, have no organizations to help them.

I am always glad to aid such. I wish I had often the opportunity both by my voice and vote. I am not sure that the voice would help, but the vote does, and they shall have it every time. I am glad they get it this time. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DARGAN. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DARGAN. Mr. Speaker, since this debate has commenced the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] has handed to me some postage-stamps, which I hold in my hand, which have been received through the mail to present as a practical argument in favor of the passage of this bill. They are sealed both ways and are therefore perfectly worthless for any purpose.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has said laws are a growth, and the correctness of this proposition is illustrated by the bill under consideration. On account of our mail facilities, on account of the extraordinary facility of communication our people in different parts of the country have with one another, and the movements of trade, a demand has arisen, a growth has taken place which requires that we shall not only have silver certificates above one dollar, but that we shall also have fractional certificates adapted to the carrying on to the best advantage a peculiar kind of trade—a retail trade through the mails—which has come into existence as one of the incidents of an advancing civilization.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

In order to show that the committee have not, as is alleged, reached without evidence the conclusion that there is a universal demand for this currency, I present, as a part of my remarks, the report of the majority of the committee, only adding that if it had been deemed necessary the evidences of this demand could have been multiplied almost indefinitely.

Mr. DARGAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6140) authorizing the issue of fractional silver certificates, beg leave to report that they have carefully considered the same, and recommend that said bill do lie on the table, and that the accompanying bill be adopted as a substitute therefor.

Since the question of issuing fractional paper currency has been referred to this committee, numerous petitions asking for the issue of such currency have been presented to Congress and referred to this committee. Numerous letters in reference to the same subject have been received by individual members of the committee. These letters and petitions earnestly urge the passage by Congress of some measure giving the people a fractional paper currency. The demand seems to be very general, as the letters and petitions referred to come from almost every section of the country, but seems to be particularly urgent from the New England States. Letters, however, have been received from Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Arkansas, Minnesota, Mississippi, and other States of the Union. These facts are mentioned in order that the House may understand that the demand for fractional paper currency does not come from some particular locality only, but may be considered as coming from almost every part of the country.

The following letter received from the secretary and treasurer of the Cultivator Publishing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., expresses in a clear and concise way the reasons upon which this demand for fractional paper currency is based:

"ATLANTA, GA., February 10, 1888.

"GENTLEMEN: Fractional currency for use through the mails is a want long felt, and the proposed relief is urgently demanded by every consideration of convenience to publishers.

"The facilities of the money-order and postal-note system of the Government are very good as far as they go, but it is a well-known fact that they reach only a very small percentage of the farmers of the country. For instance, a town that does not have a money-order office can not enjoy the advantages of the postal-note system.

"None feel the need of fractional currency for sending through the mails more than newspaper publishers. In their view nothing meets this demand so essentially well as this kind of money.

"Trusting that your honorable committee will give this matter your favorable consideration, we remain,

"Yours, truly,

The following letter from New Haven, Conn., is also presented as a clear and concise presentation of the matter from a New England standpoint:

"THE H. P. HUBBARD COMPANY,
"New Haven, Conn., February 18, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: We understand that you are on a committee in regard to the issue of silver certificates for sums less than $1, and we therefore take the liberty of writing you to state that should such a bill become a law it would greatly further our interests and the interests of a large number of our customers. We receive many remittances in small amounts, which must necessarily be paid in United States postage-stamps, so that at times we have thousands of dollars in postage-stamps on hand, which we can only dispose of at a discount. If silver certificates for fractional currency could be issued for use in the mails, it would do away with this annoyance and save us a large amount of money every year.

"The same would be the case with a large number of our customers, whose business in small remittances is even greater than ours.

"We trust you will do all in your power to put the measure through, and thus do your constituents a last service.

"Shall be pleased to hear from you in regard to the matter, and to furnish further information at any time.

The following communications will show how this question is looked upon by the farmers of the country:

"(State Grange of Massachusetts, of the Order of the Patrons of Husbandry, Master's office.)

"MARLBOROUGH, MASS., ——— ——, 188—

"DEAR SIR: The State Grange and the members of the subordinate granges of Massachusetts are heartily desirous of securing by law the reissuing of fractional currency.

"Our rural population deserve this accommodation and relief from the use of postage-stamps or coin in sending small sums through the mails.

"Yours, very truly,

"Hon. BERIAH WILKINS,
"Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency."

"(Office of The Western Rural and American Stockman.)

"CHICAGO, February 11, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: In behalf of the 35,000 subscribers of the Western Rural, I respectfully ask that the Committee on Banking report a bill in favor of the issue of postal currency. There is no legal objection to the issue of this currency, and there is no greater need on the part of the residents of the rural districts, who send many thousands of dollars annually by letter in business transactions. In thousands of cases it is not practical for these people to get postal-notes or postal-orders, and the only thing they can do is to inclose postage-stamps. In establishments like mine, we receive a large aggregate of money in postage-stamps, which are inconvenient to handle and can not be handled in large quantities in this way without considerable loss. There is no one thing that is so often demanded of us by our patrons as that we shall advocate the issue of postal currency.

"It is believed that a petition bearing the names of fifty thousand people could be secured within thirty days by any newspaper establishment of the character of this. It is hoped your committee will be able to see the necessity of such a bill. As the United States Supreme Court has affirmed the constitutionality of the greenback, such currency as we here ask is in that line, and may be issued not only to the great convenience of the people and to publishers, but also to increase the volume of our currency.

"Very respectfully,

"MILTON GEORGE,

"INDIANAPOLIS, February 10, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: In behalf of our readers, as well as ourselves, we take the liberty of requesting you to use your influence in favor of the reissue of fractional currency.

"This currency would be of incalculable benefit to newspaper publishers, and those dealing with them through the mails. We assure you that, in our judgment, such a bill as suggested would be extremely popular throughout the country.

"Very respectfully,

"IND. FARMER CO.,
"J. G. KINGSBURY,
"Secretary.

"Hon. BERIAH WILKINS."

These letters are only fair specimens of quite a large number which have been addressed to almost every member of the committee.

Petitions from various parts of the country setting forth—

1. That the petitioners are put to great inconvenience because of the lack of fractional paper currency.

2. For sending small sums in the mails the postal-note does not accommodate them. It is no safer than fractional currency, is expensive, exceedingly inconvenient to get or to collect, and is issued only at money-order offices. Now, as only 14 per cent. of the post-offices issue money-orders or postal-notes, and these only at important centers, it will be seen that the people remote from these centers, who most need the conveniences, have no way of sending money by mail except in postage-stamps or bulky silver. Stamps were not made for this purpose and are not negotiable. Silver is too unsafe. Therefore they ask for a fractional paper currency.

3. They therefore petition Congress to at once enact a law for the reissue of fractional currency, not as a substitute for silver, but to supplement it, and especially for use in the mails.

These petitions have been numerously signed by citizens of States of such different geographical location and divergent interests as the States of Nebraska, New York, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Massachusetts, Iowa, Connecticut, Illinois, and others.

In conclusion, your committee would say that after very careful consideration they are satisfied that this demand for fractional paper currency is not confined to any particular locality or to any special class of industry, and that the demand may be fairly considered to be both general and urgent.

Your committee can see no good ground for non-compliance with this demand of the people, and they have, therefore, recommended the adoption of the accompanying substitute.

This bill, it will be perceived upon examination, does not in any way increase the volume of the circulating medium. It only substitutes a currency which seems to be desired by the people for so much of the existing currency as they may desire to exchange therefor.

This bill also, it may be added, simply proposes to so enlarge existing law as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, upon demand, fractional silver certificates as well as silver certificates of larger denominations.

Mr. WEAVER. I am in favor of a paper fractional currency, but I am in favor of the old-fashioned currency if I can get it. If I can not, I am in favor of this.

I wish to criticise this bill. I do not think a piece of unfinished legislation should go through this House. The word "issued" is not in the printed bill, although it is in the original bill.

Now, let me give you a case in point: Suppose I take a thousand dollars in ten-dollar silver certificates to the Treasury Department and say to the Treasurer, "I want $1,000 in these fractional silver certificates in exchange." He says, "All right; I have the right to give them to you under the bill passed by the Fiftieth Congress." Very well; I take them. Now, I ask, what is he going to do with the thousand dollars I handed him? There is nothing in the bill that says it shall be canceled. It says that I shall have the right to exchange those certificates for the fractional silver certificates at the Treasury Department, but there is no provision of law, either existing or as proposed in this bill, for the cancellation of the notes representing the thousand dollars that I have exchanged for them. Hence, I increase the currency $1,000 by this transaction. The Treasurer must receive the $1,000 and keep it in the Treasury under the law; and the law says he may reissue that money.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that is an omission in this bill. If there is to be an issuance of these fractional silver certificates, there should be some provision as to what is to be done with the bills of larger denominations taken in exchange for them by the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The time fixed for debate by order of the House has expired.

The Chair will state for the information of the House that the original bill has been sent for, that reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Chair finds upon a careful examination of the original bill that the present bill, which was sent to the desk and read upon motion of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules and pass it, is an exact and true copy of the original bill. The word left out, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, was not a typographical error, but was, as the gentleman now states he thinks, a mistake.

Mr. WILKINS. It was a clerical error evidently in copying the bill, and I desire to say that if the House passes the bill in this shape, it may be corrected in conference or in the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. This, I believe, is not debatable. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLAND. This is a regular stab at the whole silver coinage, and I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is out of order.

Mr. DARGAN. Before the question is submitted I desire to ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have addressed the House upon this question may be permitted to extend their remarks if they see proper to do so.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. BACON. On that I ask a vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 67, not voting 80; as follows:

So the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WILKINS, by unanimous consent, the reading of the record of the roll-call was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the additional pairs.

The following-named gentlemen were announced as paired on political questions for the rest of the day:

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. FORD with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. LAIDLAW.

Mr. WILKINSON with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, with Mr. WILBER.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. LAWLER, on all bank bills.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILKINS. I now ask unanimous consent to make the correction in the bill to which I have already called attention.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8715) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ONE-DOLLAR AND THREE-DOLLAR GOLD PIECES.

Mr. BLAND (when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called) said: By direction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I move to suspend the rules and pass, with the amendments recommended by the committee, the bill (H. R. 7409) limiting the coinage of double eagles, and discontinuing the coinage of certain United States coins. The amendments propose to strike out the second section of the bill, and to make the title read: "A bill to discontinue the coinage of the three-dollar gold piece and the gold dollar."

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman moves to pass the bill with the amendments, it will be read as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the passage of this act the following denominations of coin, namely, the three-dollar gold piece and the gold dollar, shall not be struck or issued by the mints of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures has recommended the passage of this bill in the form as just read.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. DINGLEY. For the purpose of allowing an explanation of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There being no objection, the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. BLAND. This bill, as now proposed to be passed, provides merely for suspending the coinage of the three-dollar gold piece and the gold dollar. The Director of the Mint, in his annual report, has recommended this legislation, from the fact that at present these coins are not struck except when demanded by private individuals.

Mr. WEAVER. To what coins does the bill now refer?

Mr. BLAND. Only to the one-dollar and three-dollar gold pieces.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill I think is entirely correct, and ought to pass.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND to suspend the rules and pass the bill, there were—ayes 133, noes 5.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAND and Mr. SOWDEN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 151, noes 10.

Mr. SOWDEN. I do not insist on the point with reference to a quorum.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. BLAND to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title of the bill will be amended as recommended by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS STATEN ISLAND SOUND.

Mr. CRISP (when the Committee on Commerce was called) said: I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the further time of one year from and after the 16th day of June, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, allowed to the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, or either of them, to build the bridge across the Staten Island Sound or Arthur Kill, from New Jersey to Richmond County, New York, pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound," known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, passed the 16th day of June, 1886.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. PHELPS. I call for a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. PHELPS. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS STATEN ISLAND SOUND.

The SPEAKER. If no other gentleman desires to vote, the Chair will announce the vote as reported by the tellers. The ayes are 142 the noes 2.

Mr. KEAN. No quorum.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withhold his motion to adjourn while I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has made the point that no quorum has voted. In the absence of a quorum the House can transact no business.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 108, noes 11.

PRINTING OF DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn is announced, I hope to be permitted to present a report in answer to a resolution introduced to-day by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Tennessee being permitted to make a report from the Committee on Printing?

There was no objection.

The report of the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing have considered the House resolution introduced to-day in the House by Mr. GROSVENOR, of Ohio; which is as follows:

"Whereas an important bill known as the dependent pension bill passed the Senate some ten days ago; and

"Whereas the said bill has not yet been printed and placed in the hands of the proper officer of the House: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be requested to inquire and report to the House the cause of the delay in printing said bill, and what is necessary to secure the House against such delays in the future."

The committee report the same back with the statement that there is no delay in printing said bill. The bill is a Senate bill, which is not printed by the House when it is simply referred to a committee, as in this case. The Senate bill was referred by the House, on March 10, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

In answer to so much of the resolution as requires this committee to report "what is necessary to secure the House against such delays in the future," the committee can only say that such delays can be prevented by first changing the law so that Senate bills shall be ordered printed when they are laid before the House of Representatives. The Public Printer has no authority under the law to print this Senate bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the adoption of the report and demand the previous question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment before insisting on the previous question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; I yield the gentleman—how long?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Two minutes. The chairman of the committee will see that his report responds to something that is not in the resolution. There is nothing in the resolution that says anything about the Public Printer. It contains no intimation that the Public Printer had not done his duty. The question was, what became of that bill which has lain for ten days without being discovered?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; the question was why the bill has not been printed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But nobody said the Public Printer had it, and nobody has complained of the Public Printer. The purpose of the resolution was to ascertain who it was that was preventing the printing of that bill; and we find now that it is the Committee on Invalid Pensions. My purpose in offering the resolution is accomplished; but the defense of the Public Printer has been made without any necessity for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the gentleman can hardly have read his own resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wrote it myself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution says:

Whereas the said bill has not yet been printed and placed in the hands of the proper officer of the House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be requested to inquire and report to the House the cause of the delay in printing said bill.

As the report explains, the cause of the delay is this, that there is no law for the printing of this bill. It is a Senate bill sent to the House and referred under the rules of this House to a committee. There is no law to have it printed. If there was a law to authorize its printing, it would have to be done by the Public Printer; and therefore the resolution, whatever the gentleman may say, reflects on the Public Printer, and insinuates that the Public Printer has not discharged the duty he was bound to discharge.

The bill was printed in the Senate and placed in the folding-room.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is not a copy of it to be had in the folding-room.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to ask the Chair whether there was not a motion to adjourn, on which the House divided?

The SPEAKER. There was; but unanimous consent was given to the chairman of the Committee on Printing to make this report. The question is on discharging the committee from the further consideration of the resolution and adopting the report.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 50, no 1 (no quorum voting).

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1307) granting a pension to Washington T. Otey, to report it adversely. At the request of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

R. 4375) to create a board of arbitration to settle and determine the controversy between the United States and the State of Texas, relating to certain territory by them respectively claimed, reported it with amendments.

I call the matter up now for the purpose of stating that I dissent from that report and shall stand by the House bill as it came from the House of Representatives, without amendment. I should have given this notice yesterday when the report was made had I been in the Chamber.

APPOINTMENTS OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

Mr. BLAIR. I introduced a bill yesterday the second reading of which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] objected to at the time. The bill was introduced for reference, and if the Senator from Connecticut has no further objection, I ask that it be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill (S. 2443) providing, in the appointments to the civil service, for the preference in certain cases of persons who were engaged in the military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States of America during the war of the rebellion, and who were disabled therein and were not dishonorably discharged therefrom, be read the second time?

Mr. PLATT. I simply exercised my right yesterday in objecting to two readings of the bill on the day on which it was introduced. I can not object further to the reading of the bill or its reference to the committee. My objection was based upon what seemed to me an inference in the title of the bill that the Senate in some way might give its assent to the appointment in the civil service of soldiers who served the Confederate government. It was that inference in the title of the bill which struck me. Of course I can make no objection to its reference.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose that Congress, or the Senate certainly, can interpose no objection to the appointment of those who were engaged actively in hostilities on the side of the late Confederacy to civil appointments where they have returned to loyalty and their disabilities have been removed. If so, it is quite time that the objection were interposed.

The object of the bill is simply this, that, as among those who were disloyal to the Government during the war, those who were disabled by active military service shall have the preference, other things being equal, in appointments to the civil service.

We have applied that principle with reference to those who were loyal, and it seems to me that it is a very good principle to adopt with reference to those who were disloyal.

I may say now that I offer this bill in entire good faith. I am told by one who belonged to the number of those who lost a leg in the service of the Confederacy (and from other sources I have the same general knowledge) that in many of the Southern States there are thousands, and I know that in the State of North Carolina there are at least 20,000, of the soldiers of the Confederacy who lost arms or legs in the service, a very large majority of whom are in poor circumstances.

It seems to me that if either this Administration or any other administration of the Government is to give appointments in the civil service to anybody who was disloyal to the Government, these men, if otherwise competent, ought to have the preference. That is the object of the bill and nothing else.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. I should be glad to be informed as to just where this preference for the soldiers of the Confederacy who were disabled is applied. Is it applied to disabled soldiers of the Confederacy as against other soldiers of the Confederacy who are not disabled, or is it applied to disabled soldiers of the Confederacy as against individuals living in the South who were loyal, or individuals living in the South who were disloyal but who did not serve in the armies?

I should, for one, not be willing to consent that the same discriminating favor that has been applied to the loyal soldier of the North, giving him a preference in appointment because of his services in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, should be by Congress granted to the Southern soldier who was engaged in the work of destroying the Union, when we prefer Union soldiers for their services in maintaining it.

I should like to have the Senator explain just where this discrimination comes in. Is it proposed that there shall be hereafter a preference for the Confederate soldier who is disabled as there is now for the Union soldier who is disabled? That I object to.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill was read yesterday and is in the RECORD, as the Senator will find by examining the copy that is upon his desk, or ought to be; mine somebody had taken, and I have borrowed one.

Mr. HALE. But how does the Senator understand that himself?

Mr. BLAIR. I will read the bill:

That before persons shall be appointed to the civil service of the United States it shall be made to appear whether such persons were loyal to the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion, if of lawful age at any time during said war; and whenever such persons not loyal to the United States during said war shall be appointed to office in the civil service, those not dishonorably discharged from the military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States, and now suffering from disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in said service, shall be preferred to other persons not shown to have been loyal in the war of the rebellion, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary to the proper discharge of such offices.

I think the bill clearly answers all the suggestions or questions of the Senator. It merely provides that wherever persons are appointed to civil office who were of age during the rebellion, and who during the rebellion were disloyal persons, whether they were civilians or were in the military service, those in the military service and disabled by wounds or sickness in that service, if found to be competent, shall be preferred to any other disloyal person, whether he was in the military service or in the civil service.

Mr. HALE. I have a copy of the bill as it appears in the RECORD, and as the Senator has just read it, and from reading it myself as carefully as it is possible in the limited time now before us, it is very clear that the same discrimination which has been made by statutes heretofore enacted for the Northern soldier, the loyal soldier, because of his service or because of his wounds, is to be made in appointments in the South. The fact that the soldier served in the Confederacy, was wounded, was disabled, gives him a preference over and above everybody else there who did not serve. In other words, it is the crowning merit of his case that he served and was wounded or disabled in the service of the Confederacy. It puts him above the soldier who was wounded and disabled in the Mexican war for the cause of the whole Republic.

While I do not wish in any way to revive old questions or call up the past, I do think it is too early now for the Senator from New Hampshire to introduce this feature as a matter of legislation. In calling upon the Government for protection and preferment there must be some difference in merit between the man who served in the Union armies and was there disabled, and the man who served in the armies of the Confederacy and was there disabled.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator can not be in earnest in his remarks. Let him read the bill, and read it carefully.

Mr. HALE. I have read it twice.

Mr. BLAIR. It is simply a discrimination among the disloyal, and the bill provides in express terms to that effect.

Mr. HALE. In favor of the man who served in the Confederate army?

Mr. BLAIR. In favor of the man who served in the Confederate army, and is now disabled by wounds or sickness, as against other disloyal persons who did no such thing and who are not disabled.

Mr. HALE. Who did not serve in the Confederate army?

Mr. BLAIR. Who did not serve in the Confederate army, but were disloyal.

Mr. HALE. That is precisely the point. It is made a merit by this bill that the applicant for office served in the Confederate armies and was there disabled. It entitles him to preferment over and above the man who did not go into the Confederate army and did not there serve.

Mr. BLAIR. But was disloyal; and that is right.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. PLATT. The more I look at this bill the more I dislike it. Of course I recognize the benevolent and philanthropic sentiment which seems to have actuated the Senator from New Hampshire in its introduction, but I do not want to engage in any legislation for the benefit of any Confederate soldier, whether it be for preference over another Confederate soldier or over a man who was disloyal but did not enter the Confederate army, or for any other purpose.

I think this bill is fraught with danger. I think that the Senator from New Hampshire, carried away by sentiment perhaps, has introduced a bill here which ought not to go any further, and therefore I ask for the yeas and nays upon the question of the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I wish to say on behalf of the wounded soldiers of the South, that so far as my knowledge extends they have not asked any preference in any way whatever over their comrades. We recognize, however, the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire has done a very generous thing in making this proposition. We recognize that such generosity can come from those only who were in the war, and knew something of the trials of those who served upon both sides.

I would say to the Senate, in response to what the Senator from Connecticut has said, that while we have asked no preference, and nothing at the hands of the Government, except to be permitted to take care of ourselves, which we have been able to do so far, that any intimation that these soldiers were not equal in point of courage, in point of love of country, in point of honor, in every other point, to any other men, is unfounded and unjust, and unwarranted by the facts.

Mr. PLATT. I made no intimation whatever with regard to the Confederate soldier. I did not intend to do so. Perhaps of all men in the Senate I am as little disposed to do anything which may recall the controversy of those days as any one.

But, Mr. President, when the Senator from Arkansas says that the Confederate soldier was the equal of all men, and the peer of all men in his love of country, I think it is time that some objection should be made to such a statement as that in the Senate of the United States. He may have loved what was called the Confederate States, but he loved the Union only just enough to fight against it and try to destroy it; and I will not sit in my seat and have his loyalty, his devotion, his courage, and his love for the Union put on a par with that of the soldier who fought to maintain it, without entering my protest against it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, this bill originated with myself. It originated after conversation with various persons and information derived from various sources as to the condition of the Confederate soldiers of the South. There are many of them not only grievously wounded but in great destitution, men of intelligence, of capacity, of education, and as capable of serving their country as any other persons whatever who during the war for the Union were disloyal. We have applied that principle so far as the soldiers of the North are concerned——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator from New Hampshire think that in appointments under the present Administration the Confederate leaders are sufficiently potential in influence to take ample care of wounded Confederate soldiers, without the assistance of Congress?

Mr. BLAIR. I will answer the question by saying that whatever may be their influence with this Administration, I do not believe that the wounded and capable soldier of the Confederacy has received in the matter of appointments that discrimination in his own favor which he would be entitled to receive and which he should have received when appointments were made from among those who were disloyal during the war. I think there is just cause of complaint on the part of those soldiers as a class. That is my answer to the Senator from Wisconsin.

It is no use, Mr. President, after all these years have passed away, for us to cherish any special feeling of hostility towards the man in the South who was in the Confederate army, discriminating against him as in favor of the disloyal person who rendered no military service; and when we come to a class of those men who, being competent and capable, are disabled and objects of commiseration and of that just charity which the Government ought to exercise, and an appointment is to be made from among those who were disloyal, it seems to me that it is the proper thing to do to give the preference to that man.

The object of this bill, which is introduced for reference to the proper committee, is that that subject may be duly considered; and I trust that the Senate, whatever may be the ultimate disposition of the bill itself, will send it to the committee in the ordinary way.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I merely rise to say that I am very much gratified to learn both from the Senator from New Hampshire and from the Senator from Arkansas, if I understood his remarks correctly, that this proposition does not come from Confederate soldiers, from Confederates, or from anybody representing them at all.

There is no occasion, therefore, at this time to enter into any discussion as to what it would or would not be proper to do if dealing with that class of our citizens. Many of that class are in the Senate, regarded in the Senate as equals, not only constitutionally, but having the respect and friendship of their associates; and there is no occasion for any strife growing out of any former division at this time, either in debate or otherwise; but I do not believe that this measure would ever have come from the gentlemen representing the States which were formerly in rebellion, or the men who formerly went into the Confederate service.

Why, just look at it. There may be some men at the South—of course there were hundreds and thousands—who went into the rebellion, who took part in it, who furnished aid and comfort to it, although they were not wounded or disabled in its service, who before the war were eminent for high public service to their country, men like A. H. H. Stuart, men like John Bell, and like many others whom I could name. There are hundreds who could be named. If one of those persons is presented for a public office and his eminent service to the whole country and his eminent character are considered by the appointing power sufficient, although he went with the community about him into the rebellion, still the answer is to be made to him by this Government and by the authority of law, "Your services to your whole country, your eminent character, your eminent abilities, it being understood that you took part in the rebellion, are to be rejected, because you did not actually take arms in your hands, and with arms in your hands get wounded in trying to destroy the life of the country." That is this bill exactly, in terms and in words.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Is he not aware that precisely that state of affairs exists in regard to a like class at the North?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; I am. I am aware of it.

Mr. BLAIR. And is the Senator aware that the bill applies only to persons who were disloyal during the war?

Mr. HOAR. I am.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. That is just what I am talking about. The gentlemen who went into the Confederate service and were wounded in it, as they have so many times said, and, as we think, believed they were doing right and sealed that belief by risking their life, having now come back and taking part in the administration of a Government which they mean to stand by as loyal citizens henceforth, have not one of them asked of that Government to say to them or to their friends or constituents that it will make among men who were disloyal the having sustained injury or lost health or received a wound in attacking the Government a merit superior to that of eminent service rendered to the country before the war or since by men who did not incur wounds. On the other hand, every one of these persons, I believe, will say that in dealing with the Union soldier it is a proper policy, and a policy which they mean to adhere to and act upon as long as they are in power, that the man who suffered wounds or disease in fighting for the country shall be preferred to the other loyal man who did not suffer wounds or disease. That is the statute as well as the custom, and it ought to be.

I never have heard of the Confederate, public or private, who said that he expected this Government to pay him or to pay his associates or friends or constituents for what they did or for the wounds they suffered in the cause of the Confederacy. The Constitution, with the assent of these gentlemen, has said we should never pay a pension to them.

The difficulty with the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire is that he thinks that because it is a merit to have suffered a wound in the cause of the country, it should be an equal merit in dealing with persons who were disloyal to have suffered a wound in the cause opposed to that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is quite wrong in that.

Mr. HOAR. That is precisely what it is. The whole country has said in removing disabilities, in admitting the States that took part in the rebellion to their places here in the Union again, in supporting such men for office when we agree with them now in politics, that we do not propose to consider the having taken part in the rebellion an objection to holding public office. When the rebellion was put down it was that these men might stand by our side as equals, not as superiors on the one side or as inferiors or vassals on the other, but as equals. But now the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire is that in dealing with that class of persons, men who were disloyal from 1861 to 1865, in appointing that class of persons to office, the most eminent service to the whole country before or since the war shall not weigh in the scale against the having sustained a wound or incurred disease in the service of the Confederate cause.

I say I do not believe there is a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who would have thought of introducing such a bill. I do not believe there is a representative man of the South who would say that such a bill as that is reasonable or prudent or expedient. I do not believe that a representative man from among the men who were wounded in the Confederate cause could be found who would say that he regarded it as consistent with his renewed loyalty to issue these medals for a service in the Confederacy. That is what I mean to say. I do not think my friend from New Hampshire, who is as warm-hearted a man as breathes and as loyal a man as breathes, and always was, sees the effect of his own bill. I do not believe when he drew the bill he observed that that effect was in it which I find there.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not observe it now.

Mr. HOAR. I think it is there.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays on the second reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have already been demanded by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I should not have introduced this bill, coming, as I do, from the South, and having been a Confederate soldier for four years; but I can not see the objection to it which seems to have seized hold of the minds of some of the Senators on this side of the Chamber. It is simply a proposition that when an appointment is proposed to be made from the late Confederate army, all other things being equal, the disabled soldier shall be preferred. Where is the objection to that?

The Senator from Massachusetts says it is conferring a badge and that it is discriminating against some of his aged friends. Does that Senator conceive in his mind that that was an old man's war and a young man's fight? The bill does not discriminate against loyal men. The young men were actuated and impelled by a sentiment inculcated by the very men whom the Senator from Massachusetts says this bill would discriminate against. If there be an element in the South that ought to be discriminated against, it is that very element, that aged element, that experienced element that precipitated upon the young men of the country a war from which they had nothing to gain but disaster and a loss of four years of active life, of training, and of education.

Since this Administration began I have known armless and legless Confederate soldiers turned out of office in the South, not because of their politics, but simply because they had been put there by a Republican administration, and their places supplied by the very men whom the real Confederate soldier actually detests to-day.

I understand the Senator from New Hampshire as meaning nothing in this bill except that when you do take a man from the South you shall give, all other things being equal, the preference to the wounded or disabled Confederate soldier. I appeal to the reason of any Senator here whether that is not fair and right.

Take the disabled Confederate soldier in the South and you will find in nine cases out of ten a man who will tell you that he is glad the war terminated as it did. If you want to find the unreconstructed element of the South, take those whom the Senator from Massachusetts says are recognized for their eminent services before and since the war, who were years in accepting the three amendments to the Constitution, when the actual Confederate element of the South would have accepted them at once. They knew what it was to fight and they knew what it was to surrender.

I therefore, Mr. President, and I hope with becoming diffidence, here as a Confederate do support the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire. Whenever this Government has anything to bestow in the way of an office I would have it given to the wounded or the disabled Confederate, so as to have it understood that those men eminent for their services in disabling and wounding these soldiers should be excluded. I would not allow them to come here if I had my way. By way of illustration, take for instance the young men. They followed the advice and counsel of the men who were eminent for their services before the war, eminent for their services in bringing about the war, eminent now as going around the city of Washington begging for office, eminent for precipitating these young men into that war and having them wounded, eminent altogether in that line, but not eminent in the line of soldiery.

I think the bill is right in that view. It does not provide that Confederate soldiers alone shall be appointed. It does not make any discrimination in favor of the Confederate against the Union soldier. I dare say that when you go to select men for office from among those who were Confederates you shall give the preference, as the Senator himself expressed it, all other things being equal, to the man who was wounded or disabled in that war.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I need not say that there is no man in the Senate or in the South who has higher regard or deeper sympathy for the wounded Confederate soldiers than myself. I have shown by my course here uniformly that I have exhibited regard for the wounded Federal soldiers, and I have always tried to do justice.

I am sure that all the Southern Senators around me join in the feeling I rise to express, one of great gratification at the generous action of the Senator from New Hampshire. It was a bold and generous and noble deed on his part, and I simply wish to express that feeling while I explain the reasons why I shall vote against the bill.

No Southern soldier, either individually or in any organized bodies, has asked for the passage of any bill of this sort. We do not feel it right to make any discrimination, and my own opinion is that in the appointment of Federal officers the Government should demand those best qualified to discharge the duties of the office. While we recognize gratefully the kind feelings which prompted the bill, I, for one, shall be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the question before the Senate, as I understand, is whether this bill shall have the courtesy of a second reading and a reference to the appropriate committee for consideration. That is the question—not on the passage of the bill. In my service in the Senate, which has not been a very long one, extending, however, over three Congresses, I have not observed until this morning and on this day a refusal on the part of the Senate to allow a bill to receive its second reading and be referred to the appropriate committee.

I agree with the Senator from South Carolina that no Confederate soldier has asked for this bill. I do not ask for it; I do not believe any Confederate will ever ask for it; and in voting in favor of the second reading of this bill, which I shall do, I shall not do it from any motive or any wish on my part to facilitate legislation of this sort.

But, sir, I find a bill introduced by a distinguished Senator from the North, a gentleman whose services in the Union Army, as I understand, were very meritorious—for I understand now that he suffers from a wound received in the war—and when such a Senator, of his own motion, acting on his own judgment of what is right and proper, offers a bill of this character, I do not feel that I ought to slap him in the face by voting to refuse to his bill the universal courtesy of a second reading and a reference to a committee. I can not do that, sir.

I esteem the Senator from New Hampshire, from a considerable intercourse with him on important committees, as a thoroughly patriotic Senator. I believe that in all his actions in this body he has the good of the country at heart; and when a fair and honorable representative of those who were in arms against me and my section comes with this peace-offering, though it may not meet in the end my judgment, as this does not, I will not, as I have just remarked, show him the discourtesy of not allowing his bill to receive a second reading and be referred to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that this bill be read the second time now.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill was introduced in the usual way yesterday, during the later proceedings of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from New Hampshire to make that motion.

Mr. BLAIR. Yes, if this be the proper time to make it.

I do not apologize, Mr. President, for the introduction of this bill. If any shall have occasion to apologize for opposition to it, or for opposition to the ordinary treatment extended to bills introduced in this body, those persons will not occupy my seat. This bill was not suggested by anybody on this side of the Chamber. It could not be suggested by anybody who was disloyal during the war and who is loyal to-day. But if upon either side of this Chamber it be supposed that there is no sentiment either North or South, or in both sections, that will respond to it, I am mistaken, or others will find themselves mistaken. I believe that the bill is based not alone upon the most generous sentiments, but upon those of strict justice.

There will be here and there an exception such as is imagined by the acute sense of the Senator from Massachusetts perhaps, but in those exceptional cases the discrimination which has always sufficed to enable that class of persons when selected from the loyal North to carry off the offices to the exclusion of the soldier of equal merit can be relied upon in the future to discriminate equally against the Confederate soldier as among the disloyal. The Senator from Massachusetts need be under no apprehension for the gray-haired traitors of the South who have been loyal a little longer than these disabled men who fought and lost almost everything that was important to life; he need not fear that those men will fail to have discrimination in their favor. One reason why this bill is here to-day is because they have succeeded altogether too largely in securing that discrimination thus far, and my friends on this side of the Chamber need not worry that this bill will fail to elicit an awakening response from all over the South from the men whom some of these gentlemen with greater intelligence and more years misled others into a war which these same men would otherwise have avoided.

As I said, I have had occasion to know something about the disabled soldier of the South; and I believe that when the disabled soldier of the South has become loyal there is in his bosom a stronger sentiment of loyalty to-day than in that of the mass of civilians who were in the same opposition to the Union and who gave equally efficient but less honorable and manly services for the destruction of this Government.

Now, sir, when there are in the State of North Carolina alone 20,000 men, as I am informed, without arms or without legs, poor, many of them dying in the almshouses of that State, and when all through the South there is a like condition of things, many of these men educated, worthy, competent gentlemen, and there are appointments going from this Government to the South, to the disloyal, in vast numbers, why should not these men, equally competent and equally patriotic to-day, receive that discrimination which is due to the man who fights for his principles over him who was willing in the late controversy to render equally disloyal service and yet saved himself from all danger?

This bill can reach only those who were young at the time. They must be fully competent for service; all other things must be equal; and everybody can see that among those who are to receive appointments to the civil service of the United States, the clerkships in Washington and the employments about the Capitol, are the men who are in view, just exactly as that class of men are taken care of by the Federal statutes by preferring the soldiers of the war of the Union. These men necessarily must have been young men, for there has been a quarter of a century elapsing since the war; and how came they into the rebellion? How came the Northern soldier under the flag, fighting for the preservation of the Union? As a rule they were young men, loyal to their country. They enlisted into the war as a matter of patriotism. At the South, with these men, it was simply a matter of sentiment. How could they stand up against the old men and against the action of their organized communities? They inevitably found the military service. Had they failed to find the service of the Confederate States, as a rule they would have lacked in the highest qualities of mankind.

Now, Mr. President, having lost everything, with no moral guilt, now as patriotic as anybody is to-day, and with the Government appointing from among the disloyal, this bill only asks, not as a tribute to their disloyalty, but as a tribute to the manliness within their bosoms which led them to fight for their principles, that that class of men in their misfortune, when equally competent, shall receive the favor of civil appointments. It is no discrimination against the loyal; but only when those who were disloyal are to be appointed that the man who took these risks, who endured these misfortunes, who is recovering from them to-day, and yet can render equally good service to the Government, shall receive the preference. That is all there is in this bill.

I ask nothing for courtesy in regard to me from anybody on any side of the Chamber. I offered the bill in good faith. It is a bill that not only ought to be introduced but it ought to be a law; there is no valid objection to it. The sentimentality to which Senators allude is a false sentimentality against this bill as I look at it. The bill itself is framed on a profound principle of justice and of right.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I certainly do not think that anything in the nature of apology is needed from the Senator from New Hampshire for the introduction of this bill. Every man in this Chamber knows him well enough to know that this proposed piece of legislation has sprung from his warm sympathy with those who are in distressed condition, that the bill comes from his heart. But I fear that he has not given to it the sober judgment of his head and that calm scrutiny that so radical a bill deserves.

Personally I would have preferred that this bill had been permitted to take the usual course, have gone to second reading, and been referred to an appropriate committee for its consideration; but I do not think it discourteous to the Senator that on a bill of this nature, involving propositions so new, strange, and startling, the Senate should pause to consider whether it should even go to second reading and receive the consideration of one of the committees of the Senate. While I would be one of the last on this floor to be guilty of anything that might seem like discourtesy to the Senator from New Hampshire, who was such a gallant soldier and is usually foremost in that which is for the good of the country at large, yet I do not propose to vote for the second reading of this bill, now that the attention of the Senate has been challenged to its peculiar and exceptional character.

We have upon the statute-books a law that, unfortunately, is "more honored in the breach than in the observance;" a law which says that ex-Union soldiers shall be preferred, mental and physical qualifications being equal, to those who did not serve in the armies of the United States at the time when the existence of the Republic was in danger and when it called for defenders.

Upon what does that legislation rest, Mr. President? It clearly rests upon the idea of obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to those who thus served, and particularly to those who were injured in such service. It does not rest upon any obligation that flows from mere disability, but upon an obligation that flows from the service; and I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that this proposed legislation must so rest if it has proper foundation. This bill proposes that a certain class in the South who are disabled shall be preferred for civil office. But that is not all; it says that such disability must have been contracted in the rebellion and rest upon an honorable discharge from service in the Confederacy in the war of the rebellion.

Mr. BLAIR. The language is "not dishonorably discharged."

Mr. MANDERSON. Which, I take it, means honorably discharged.

Mr. BLAIR. Many were not discharged at all, but surrendered.

Mr. MANDERSON. That would be presumed to be an honorable discharge from the service or side that met with defeat and surrendered.

Mr. BLAIR. Of course that phrase would include those.

Mr. MANDERSON. But whether honorably discharged or dishonorably discharged or not discharged at all, whether passing into the body of citizenship of the country by force of circumstances, being the surrender of the rebel armies, is utterly immaterial. The basis of the obligation as proposed under this bill is service in the Confederacy, is active support and armed aid and comfort to the war of the rebellion. It seems to me that before we can enter upon this new field of legislation as a preliminary step we must repeal, by proper action in the Congress of the United States and in the Legislatures of the different States, the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

If, as I have suggested, this rests upon obligation, obligation flowing from the Government of the United States to those who served in rebellion against it, why is it not in direct conflict with this provision of the fourteenth amendment?

> But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

It is true that this may have been intended to have a more limited significance, to mean a mere dollar obligation, but I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that this bill is in direct violation of the spirit, if not the very letter, of this constitutional provision.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. If that be a constitutional provision applicable in its spirit against this bill, why does it not exclude from office or from any sort of governmental assistance, direct or indirect, the entire disloyal population, whether engaged in the military or civil service of the rebellion?

Mr. MANDERSON. It does so by express terms until their political disabilities shall be removed by Congress, by a vote of two-thirds. It is so stated in the fourteenth amendment itself.

Mr. BLAIR. Does not the Senator understand that before, under this or any other bill, any one can be appointed to a civil office, those disabilities must have been removed; and does he not know that the entire Confederacy is furnishing civil officers by appointment under the law to-day?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do certainly understand that when the political disabilities of an ex-Confederate shall be removed he is eligible for citizenship and for office; but I say that in this legislation there is a proposition to reward him for such service, to pay an obligation that is prohibited by the spirit, if not by the letter, of this constitutional amendment; and it is for this reason that I propose to vote even against the second reading of this bill, not out of discourtesy to the Senator from New Hampshire, but because I am opposed to this effort to invade the constitutional guaranties that have been given to this Republic for its own safety and perpetuation.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, if this were a question of courtesy to the Senator who has offered this bill, there would be no doubt in my mind as to how I should vote upon it. I feel incapable of offering a discourtesy to any Senator on this floor, and I certainly would go very far to avoid doing so to one who has been inspired by such magnanimous and generous sentiments as those which that Senator has expressed.

But no public question can ever be decided by any mere matter of courtesy. The question before the Senate is the propriety of the consideration of this bill. If it had gone in due course without note or comment, none would have felt that anything improper had occurred. But since a question has been made upon it, that question must be met, and I trust that no ex-Confederate on this floor will dodge that question, although doubtless his emotions might incline him to do so. If I could with propriety decline to vote upon this question I would do so, because in my judgment it does not become a Confederate soldier to ask of the United States Government any peculiar right or privilege whatsoever; and I have never known a Confederate soldier within my own knowledge to do it.

The Confederate soldier boldly laid down the gauntlet of war and made it war, and when he came out of that war he had contempt for but two classes who were engaged in it: first, the men who made apologies; and, second, the men who demanded them. Questions of great international strife and of great social conflict never descend to personality. They are governed by the great philosophy of human existence; they are governed by laws higher and superior to and above the mere conduct of the individual who moves in the great path of human history.

I have no doubt that the honorable Senator from New Hampshire has offered this bill in a spirit of benevolence and of kindness and of generosity; but it has not been called for by any Confederate; it has not grown out of any demand of public sentiment. The wise legislation of the world is generally that which is the product of a matured public opinion which has gradually formed behind it and of which it becomes the mere legislative expression. No public discussion has been had upon this subject; no wise debate either North or South has been heard upon it. What Senator had a right to originate it? I venture to believe that its origin is almost entirely confined to the lucubrations of his own mind. While I shall greatly respect, yea, shall honor and admire and feel my soul go out to the great and noble spirit that will face any kind of opposition to assert that which he believes to be right, I can not believe, sir, that in this instance that gentleman has acted wisely or in consonance with the public spirit of the country.

All, sir, that the Confederate soldier asks of the United States is that he shall stand equal before its law, shall have a fair opportunity to work out his own salvation; and I venture to say there is not a county or a town or a hamlet from the Potomac to the Rio Grande in which a Confederate soldier will be seen in rags or in tatters in the street begging bread. There is no palace and no hut and no fireside where he is not always a welcome and honored guest; and there is no honorable citizen who would not divide with him whatever he had in this life of its comforts.

There is no danger of any such honorable and true man, however humble he may be, or however little may be his fortune, dying upon the roadside because no good Samaritan will come by to lend him a helping hand. The Confederates ask nothing special not accorded to other men in this Government; all they ask is that they be respected in those rights of American citizens which they have assumed knowingly and intentionally, and which they intend to abide by, and that you shall help them in such a manner that no man can justly point toward them the finger of scorn or apply to them the epithet of insult.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am personally grateful to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] for the manly and I venture to say statesmanlike speech he has just made. I have seen nothing so disagreeable in the proceedings of this body in some time as the presentation of this bill by the Senator from New Hampshire. If it had passed by without notice and gone to the committee, I should not have cared whether or not the question had been raised upon the second reading, and I should have been willing to wait for the report of the committee for any debate; but the point has been made, and it must be met. There is nothing complicated in the bill, in the proposition, that we do not understand just as well now as we should after a long report from any committee.

I think the bill is fundamentally a mistake. I need not, I am sure, disclaim any feeling like personal hatred toward the men who were Confederates. I need not disclaim a desire to in any way bar their progress or disqualify or dishonor them; but a generous, manly Confederate soldier knows just as well as any of us that an issue was joined before the greatest tribunal in the world upon a question involving the very foundation of republican government; and it was fought out as men fight, fought out as great armies of free men alone can fight. Somebody won—some theory, some fundamental constitutional theory or proposition won. What was it? The assertion was vindicated by the result according to the best of human knowledge and effort that that was a causeless war and an unconstitutional war, and if you choose, a wicked war. That was accorded by the surrender at Appomattox as the judgment of the nation. Shall I turn around, however, ungenerously towards any man who was engaged honorably on the other side? God forbid! Shall I bar his progress? Not at all. Shall I object to meeting him here as a brother? By no means. Do I object to the fact that his fellow-citizens in his State love him because of his gallantry? No, sir. Does any man think the less of South Carolina because of the presence here of the two gallant generals of the Confederacy? Not at all, not at all. I think I may say I should feel ashamed of South Carolina if she did not remember such men in the days of her restoration.

But at the same time I will not, by my vote and without my most vigorous and indignant protest, permit to be put either in Constitution or in statute anything that shall in any degree reward a man for having been in that war. I will not bar him or disqualify him, but I hold that it would be a crime, a dishonor to the graves of Union soldiers to say that now we will only regard the question of valor, and that we will give to those men who were the bravest in this attempt to destroy the country the preference in all political honors and preferments. How should we conduct a war upon principles like that? Whenever Stonewall Jackson made a splendid charge, we would say, "That will make him minister to Vienna;" if he lost, "That will make him governor of his State;" if he be defeated and it is recorded in the great records of the war as a rebel, nevertheless "when he comes back he shall be preferred." But, on the other hand, such is the savage and terrible cruelty and wickedness, if you choose, of war that much as even Union soldiers would have been glad to drink a glass to the gallantry of Stonewall Jackson, as a military matter, it was a satisfaction to learn that that terrible soldier was out of the battle; was it not?

Am I, therefore, ungenerous? If he had survived the war, I would have gone some way to shake his hand by reason of his personal and military character.

But in a future rebellion, if one shall ever arise here, when such confused and confusing and crude logic as that of the Senator from New Hampshire prevails, the question will arise, what is to be the treatment of men committing the great crime? Shall the war be waged with the understanding that the bravest men in destroying the country will be the most honored men upon that side when the contest shall have ended?

The Senator from Nebraska has very well pointed to the constitutional provisions which are a legal and constitutional condemnation of the conflict—not a social and personal condemnation, not an ungenerous condemnation, but they are the recorded legal judgment after the great struggle. They call it a rebellion; they forbid the payment of its debts or obligations of any sort whatever, and for a time disqualified its leaders from holding office. We should have been unworthy of the respect of the Confederates if we had not put upon record something to show that we had won. The ex-soldier who now fails to stand up for his cause is a coward, is a doughface, is a reptile in the consideration of gentlemen.

I am obliged to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I honor him that he remembers with gratitude and love the men with whom he fought, and I thank him that he does not ask us to make what in my judgment I must say would be fools of ourselves by such legislation as this.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] closes his address by charging the man who does not boast of his devotion to his treason with cowardice and lack of manhood——

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, because he does so much of it, but I said nothing of that sort.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's words are matter of record, where I have no doubt they will remain; and the Senator knows whether I state his sentiments correctly or not.

Mr. President, we are not dealing with traitors in arms. We are dealing with men who once were in arms, who were in disloyal opposition to the Government, but who are now citizens of our common country with the obligations and the rights of citizens. We are bound to presume that they are patriots to-day if we claim for ourselves that we are so. I have introduced here a bill providing for a preference among those who once were disloyal, but who are patriots now, some of them in this Chamber and hundreds of thousands of them citizens of our common country. The bill gives a certain preference to those who by the misfortunes of war in a joint disloyalty suffered physical hurt by reason of which they are now disqualified from physical exertion. When an appointment is to be made of some one who was in opposition to the Government, but who is now loyal, the bill provides that these men thus unfortunate shall receive the preference among those who were equally wrong in their opposition to the Government.

That is this bill, and nothing more can be made of it. My friends, North or South, can make neither more nor less of it. This bill is not a bill which is based on any of the prejudices or the patriotisms or the convictions of twenty-five years ago; but it is a proposition designating how we shall deal with a certain class of people who did certain things twenty-five years ago and among whom I say are to be found those who are unfortunate, all if you please equally underserving, but in behalf of a certain class now suffering as the result of the exhibition of manhood on the battle-field, which the Senator from Connecticut so highly eulogizes, though it was demonstrated in tearing down the flag and killing the boys of the North. The bill provides that the man so engaged in armed conflict for his principles, who was disabled as the result, shall receive the preference over the craven who did not do it and who perhaps misled him into his opposition to the Government. That is a better way of putting it.

The Senator says that Stonewall Jackson is to be rewarded under the principles of this bill because of his great military service, because of the great consequence of his opposition to the Union cause. But that is not in the bill. That is nowhere but in the imagination of the Senator. Suppose Stonewall Jackson had conducted every great battle of the Confederacy, every great victory, and presided in every great defeat of the Confederacy, and had failed to be wounded and disabled, under the provisions of this bill could he have been appointed as against the lowest and most unfortunate private, the most inconsequential servant of the Confederacy, who in arms was disabled, and to-day is competent to fulfill the duties of the office to which he asks to be appointed? By no means; and that illustration ought to satisfy the Senator that his whole argument is a sham and a folly, and a misconstruction and a misapprehension, and a piece of nonsense, to follow up his long string of adjectives.

No, Mr. President, it is not a war between men who engaged in armed conflict for the destruction of the Union, but that, as between those who were disloyal, the disabled shall to-day receive the preference as a matter of charity and as a means to some extent of alleviating that misfortune from which they are suffering. And it is pretty late, Mr. President, to appeal to the prejudices of the war and to say that when we are dealing with this great class of our fellow-citizens of the South whose affections were outside of the Union and who were disloyal we will not recognize a condition of misfortune and of personal suffering on the part of those to whom we are to give appointments, in recognition of the great principles of charity.

I have been requested, Mr. President, to ask unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill go over until to-morrow morning; and I now ask that consent.

Mr. HAWLEY. It goes over at 2 o'clock anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bill be postponed until to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. If we are to have a repetition of this debate at a subsequent time, if that is the object of postponement, I shall object. I think we may as well dispose of it now.

Mr. BLAIR. That is not the object. Senators have asked me to request unanimous consent that the matter be postponed until to-morrow morning. I can say no more. I do not care to prolong the debate; but Senators desire a postponement, and I asked it for that reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill lying on the table until to-morrow? The Chair hears none.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE RATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. The first case on the Calendar will be stated.

Order of Business No. 161, being a resolution submitted by Mr. BECK directing the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to inquire into the advisability of reducing the rate of postage on first-class mail matter, was announced as the first business on the Calendar.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. HOAR. This unexpected debate has taken up a large share of the day, and the morning business is not completed. I venture to ask unanimous consent that the morning business shall be completed, although the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, and that to-morrow be assigned for the consideration of the Calendar as to-day was.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator to make his motion broad enough so that we may go through the Calendar under Rule VIII, and get rid of the cases that can be disposed of without much debate?

Mr. HOAR. Nobody can tell how long that would take. If at the end of to-morrow the Senate wish to go through the Calendar, they can. I think it is better to confine this request to going on to to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the request, but I think the Senate ought to go through the whole Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that morning business be received, and that at the conclusion of morning business the Calendar be resumed, and that the same order be continued for the legislative day to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE RATES.

Mr. BECK. I thought I heard a resolution submitted by me, Order of Business 161, announced a moment ago as the next business in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported as the first Order of Business on the Calendar under the rule, but it was informally laid aside to receive morning business.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question. The resolution was reported adversely by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I understand an adverse report stands in the nature of an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been so considered. The Chair, under the order of the Senate, will receive any further morning business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1712) for the erection of a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2365) for the relief of William P. Thorne, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2311) for the relief of Heman D. Walbridge and Reginald Fendall, trustees, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the communication from the Postmaster-General of February 29, 1888, in response to a resolution of the Senate of February 24, 1888, in relation to holding public documents for postage that had been franked and deposited in the mail by a United States Senator, submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to lie on the table; and he asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, which was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. FRYE. On my motion the bill (S. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, was ordered to lie on the table. I ask that it be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, having been read twice, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WILLIAM R. BLEVINS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that Order of Business 169, being the bill (S. 466) granting a pension to William R. Blevins, reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions January 31, 1888, with the adverse report thereon, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, that I may present additional evidence which was not filed before the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that Senate bill 466, granting a pension to William R. Blevins, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions with the accompanying papers presented by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Mr. Blevins, with his discharge and the affidavits of Elihu G. Raybourn and others, and ask that they be received and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be received and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2458) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Mary S. Maynard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MOTHER OF JAMES E. LAWRENCE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer a resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Eliza Lawrence, mother of James E. Lawrence, deceased, late a laborer of the Senate, the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' salary as a laborer aforesaid. And said sum shall be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

This most worthy laborer of ours, who was in the service of the Senate for a long time, died three days ago and left his mother in North Carolina in very straitened circumstances; and I hope that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will act speedily, if they think it right, upon this resolution, to which committee it must be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred, under the rules, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

FORFEITURE OF OREGON WAGON-ROAD LAND GRANT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 13th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, and submitting the draught of a proposed bill to forfeit lands granted to the State of Oregon for the construction of certain wagon-roads, and for other purposes.

The presentation of facts by the Secretary of the Interior herewith transmitted is the result of an examination made under his direction, which has developed, as it seems to me, the most unblushing frauds upon the Government, which if remaining unchallenged will divert several hundred thousand acres of land from the public domain and from the reach of honest settlers to those who have attempted to prevent and prostitute the beneficent designs of the Government. The Government sought by the promise of generous donations of land to promote the building of wagon-roads for public convenience and for the purpose of encouraging settlement upon the public lands. The roads have not been built and yet an attempt is made to claim the lands under a title which depends for its validity entirely upon the construction of these roads.

The evidence which has been collected by the Secretary of the Interior plainly establishing this attempt to defraud the Government and exclude the settlers who are willing to avail themselves of the liberal policy adopted for the settlement of the public lands, is herewith submitted to the Congress with the recommendation that the bill which has been prepared, and which is herewith transmitted, may become a law, and with the earnest hope that the opportunity thus presented to demonstrate a sincere desire to preserve the public domain for settlers, and to frustrate unlawful attempts to appropriate the same, may not be neglected.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 20, 1888.

NOTE.—The evidence collected by the Secretary of the Interior accompanies the copy of this message transmitted to the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. 8004) authorizing the issue of fractional silver certificates; and

A bill (H. R. 7409) to discontinue the coinage of the three-dollar gold piece and the gold dollar.

CALIFORNIA MISSION INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first order of business on the Calendar will be stated.

Order of Business 164, being the bill (S. 70) to provide for warehousing fruit brandy, was announced as first in order.

Mr. PLATT. Yesterday the bill for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California was partly considered, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was laid aside, keeping its place on the Calendar, for some conference upon the matter. It is Order of Business 113.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause one moment. The Chair would like to be instructed by the Senate upon the point whether bills that have been passed over without prejudice, retaining their place on the Calendar, ought to be called when the Calendar is next resumed under Rule VIII, or whether the Calendar is to be taken up at the point where its consideration was stopped.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the uniform practice of the Senate is that bills so passed over have been subject to the call of the Senator in charge of them to call them up at any time he chose.

Mr. PLATT. So I understood.

Mr. HARRIS. They are not to be called first as in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless otherwise instructed, the Chair will follow that practice.

Mr. PLATT. I was about to remark that I do not think I can be here during the whole day, and upon conference with the Senator from Colorado some amendments have been suggested, and, so far as I am concerned, are agreed to, and I do not think the further consideration of the bill will occupy more than a very few minutes, and therefore I ask that it be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2) for the relief the Mission Indians in the State of California.

Mr. HOAR. I give notice, for the convenience of the Senate, that after this bill is disposed of I shall call up the matter which stands at the head of the Calendar, the case of Sarah E. E. Perine, Order of Business 45.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment to Senate bill No. 2 will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 13, after the word "eighty," the Committee on Indian Affairs reported an amendment to insert "nor more than 640;" so as to read:

To each single person over twenty-one years of age, not less than 80 nor more than 640 acres, apportioned in like manner.

Mr. PLATT. If it be in order, I should like to move, in lieu of that amendment, to strike out all from the eighth to the fourteenth lines in the section, inclusive, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 8 to line 14, inclusive, as follows:

To each head of a family not more than 640 acres nor less than 160 acres, at the discretion of said Secretary, of which such proportion, not exceeding 10 acres, as he shall deem for the best interest of the allottee, shall be arable land; to each single person over twenty-one years of age, not less than 80 acres, apportioned in like manner.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To each head of a family not more than 640 acres nor less than 160 acres of pasture or grazing land, and in addition thereto not exceeding 20 acres, as he shall deem for the best interests of all of the allottees, of arable land in some suitable locality; to a single person over twenty-one years of age not less than 80 nor more than 640 acres of pasture or grazing land, and not exceeding 10 acres of such arable land.

Mr. PLATT. That meets the views of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment reported by the committee should first be acted on; but if there be no objection the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be entertained and reported as superseding it.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the committee amendment can be treated as superseded. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to strike out and insert.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Now I ask to go back to section 3 and strike out from lines 29, 30, and 31 these words—unless such person shall have been paid the value of his improvements as appraised by the aforesaid commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. With these amendments I believe the bill meets the approval of the Senator from Colorado and conforms to the bill which was formerly recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5639) for erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming.

SARAH E. E. PERINE.

Mr. HOAR. I now call up the bill for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 396) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased.

Mr. PLATT. I move, and I believe with the assent of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], to strike out of line 10 the words "and which," and insert in lieu of them the words "so far as said;" so as to read:

So far as said increased cost was caused by delays, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have an amendment to offer. At the end of the bill I move to add:

And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractors and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, Such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor over and above the original contract price for building said vessel shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expenses to the contractor than the original plan and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amount thereof be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimant: And provided further, That the receipts or vouchers heretofore signed by the contractors for the building of said vessels shall be considered by said court as prima facie evidence of settlement of and payment for the claims now made, but which vouchers and receipts shall be susceptible of explanation by proofs, showing the net indebtedness of the Government, and the circumstances under which the same were given.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator if he would be willing to offer those four provisos separately. Two of them seem to me to be entirely reasonable. The first two I think the Senator will be willing to modify on an explanation.

Mr. McPHERSON. The bill following this bill upon the Calendar is one for the relief of Nathaniel McKay. The House of Representatives have passed a bill for the relief of Nathaniel McKay with exactly such an amendment upon it as I now offer to the bill for the relief of Perine. The two cases are exactly alike. Both Perine and McKay built several monitors during the war. As I understand, none of them were completed at the close of the war in 1865, and an additional compensation over and above the contract price, for increased cost of material and increased cost of labor, and also for alterations made while the ships were under construction, has been asked for by the parties.

In addition to the ships built by Perine and McKay there were some thirty or forty others, and the very moment Congress takes action upon these cases it will be met by bills asking for like appropriations in cases claimed to be somewhat similar.

As I stated yesterday in debate upon the floor, some of these ships were paid for in full at the time of construction, and an agreement was entered into between the contractors and the proper officers of the Government that the compensation should be received in full, and such a receipt was given to the Government, after which the cases were again opened. New boards were appointed; in short, three boards were appointed, one known as the Gregory board, then the Selfridge board, and finally the Marchand board. Some of these boards did report in favor of additional compensation to be paid to the ship-builders by reason of the delays and the additional cost of labor and cost of material and changed plans. Some of them reported, however, that there was no compensation due.

What I propose to do is to guard this bill in such a way that whatever has been paid by the Government up to this time shall be properly credited.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me a moment. Since the Senator began his remarks I have received a communication from a gentleman who appeared before the committee in behalf of the claimant, saying that the persons interested here are content that the amendment proposed by the Senator shall be adopted. Therefore I withdraw all objection to it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well. I move exactly the proposition put on the McKay bill by the other House.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from New Jersey will allow me to ask whether this amendment now is identical with the amendment that accompanies the McKay bill as it has passed the House of Representatives? I ask the question because I have not been able to hear all his remarks.

Mr. McPHERSON. Precisely. I will state to the Senate that my understanding is that the amendment is in that exact phraseology, and if it is not I am perfectly willing to have it amended to conform thereto.

Mr. EVARTS. The amendment may be adopted now.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will give in as few words as possible the exact meaning of the amendment. First, that we shall keep in view all the time the receipts theretofore given by Mr. Perine to the Government; second, that any increase of cost by reason of alterations for which recovery shall be had shall be due entirely to the acts of the officers of the United States; third, that any compensation fixed between the contractors and the Government for specific alterations made in advance shall be conclusive on the contractors; fourth, that the alterations, when completed, complied with the requirements of the officers of the Government; fifth, that all sums already paid on account of the present claim shall be deducted.

I think the amendment covers that whole ground. I have no objection to the bill with that amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to correct one statement that the Senator from New Jersey made, probably inadvertently, that all these claims had been considered by three boards. The three boards did not consider all the claims. There were quite a number not considered at all by the Marchand board, and there were two or three left out by the Selfridge board without consideration owing to a misapprehension of the claimants.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think it is fair that I should state that the Marchand board did not allow all the claims. A different state of facts was found. Acting entirely upon the state of facts already decided, they agreed to pay certain claimants. Mr. Secor received compensation for his vessel, exactly what these people ask now and what they expect to get in the court; but I believe in making up the bill it was on the principles involved in the amendment I have now offered.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to explain the adjudications already made in these cases.

Mr. HOAR. The case has been adjudicated under the circumstances I stated. I will repeat the statement. There are several of these cases; the facts are very complicated, and it is therefore difficult to answer any question, and one becomes confused by confounding one case with another; but I am sure that as far as adjudication has taken place it was under the circumstances I stated yesterday.

These parties made a contract to build an ironclad or a floating battery. The contract provided that the work should be done in a certain time; I think it was within nine months, but I will not state positively. It was, however, within a few months. This matter of building ironclads was then an experiment just being tried. The Monitor, as everybody knows, was a new invention during the war. The Secretary of the Navy inserted in the contract that the builders of the vessels should make such variations in the plans of the vessels as the Government should order from time to time, and if they did not carry out the contract the Government might take possession of their ship-yards and do it themselves. It was a war contract.

Thereupon, constantly new lights were being constantly thrown on this branch of naval architecture, so that, as I said yesterday, the Secretary of the Navy ordered changes which cost millions of dollars. The Government ordered these vast changes, reconstructing the whole character of the vessels, and it took two or three years to build them instead of their being completed in a short time. The cost of iron and labor had been multiplied by three, at any rate enormously increased—everybody knows that general fact—after the time originally fixed for the conclusion of the work and before the time when it was actually completed. This additional cost was imposed by the action of the officers of the Government.

The parties went to the Court of Claims. There came up a matter about an appeal, but the Court of Claims held that they could recover first the amount of the original contract so far as it was completed; next the amount of the extras so far as they were carried out under the direction of the officers of the Government, but that they had no authority to allow for the increased cost of completing the original structures by reason of the great delay occasioned by the requirements of the Government, so that the man who could for an expenditure of $300,000 in labor and iron and other materials have completed the work in nine months, when he had to complete it in twenty-nine months, the extra twenty months occasioned a rise in labor and materials. Three separate commissions reported to the Department that that loss had been occasioned under such circumstances that it ought to be paid by the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. The Secretary of the Navy required changes to be made by these parties which caused delay in the execution of the contracts, and this delay added to their cost?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; and the boards of officers appointed to inquire into the subject, of one of which Mr. Cragin, formerly a member of the Senate, was a member, advised that the loss should be repaid. The bill provides that the sum awarded shall be received in full. I do not understand that anything has ever been paid to these parties for the particular item of claim in this bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. This bill, as I understand, simply carries into effect the finding of the Selfridge board.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; that is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HOAR. Some person—I do not know who—has sent me a card from the gallery saying, "The Perine case has never been before the Court of Claims." I can not undertake at this moment, in regard to half a dozen cases, to distinguish the facts between one of them and another in their details, and the answer which I made to the Senator from Mississippi is the answer relative to these claims generally.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATHANIEL M'KAY AND DONALD M'KAY'S EXECUTORS.

Mr. HOAR. In the next case, which I now call up, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill, which is later on the Calendar, House bill No. 2477, may be brought up and substituted for Senate bill No. 4.

Mr. TELLER. I insist on the five-minute rule being applied. If Senators will speak only five minutes and only once on a bill, we shall get along faster.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay, and asks that it be considered in place of Order of Business 46, Senate bill No. 4. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 4) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

WAREHOUSING FRUIT BRANDY.

The bill (S. 70) to provide for warehousing fruit brandy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By it the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same," approved March 3, 1877, are extended and made applicable to brandy distilled from apples or peaches, or from any other fruit the brandy distilled from which is not now required or hereafter shall not be required to be deposited in a distillery warehouse; but each of the warehouses established under act of March 3, 1877, or which may hereafter be established, shall be in charge either of a storekeeper or of a storekeeper and gauger, at the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CROIX RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1139) for the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,000 for the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River where it forms the boundary between the State of Maine and the Province of New Brunswick, the bridge to be located to connect the town of Baring, Washington County, Maine, with the town of Upper Mills, in the Province of New Brunswick, if the government of New Brunswick shall appropriate a like sum for the construction of the bridge.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no contract shall be made or money expended for the construction of said bridge until the plans and specifications for the same shall have been submitted to the Secretary of War of the United States and approved by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETTS, NICHOLS & CO.

The bill (S. 1328) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for payment to the holder of draft numbered 5453, on Treasury-Interior warrant numbered 4801, dated March 1, 1860, payable to and indorsed by Sampson & Hendricks, of Austin, Tex., on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, for $250.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the consideration at this time of a bill passed over yesterday on the objection of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. It is Order of Business 701. The Senator from Vermont consents to the bill being considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the consideration of that bill will be resumed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be resumed at the point where it was left off yesterday.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was in section 1, line 20, after the word "the," to strike out "west side" and insert "middle;" so as to read:

Beginning for the main line of said road at the intersection of Connecticut avenue and Boundary street; thence along the middle of Columbia road to Woodley road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "package," line 41, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That whenever the net receipts of said company, from its business upon said road, shall for any year exceed 8 per cent. of the actual cost of such road, then said company shall, under the direction of said commissioners, reduce the rate of passenger fare to an amount as near as the same can be approximated so that the net receipts of said company from its business upon such road shall not exceed 8 per cent. of the actual cost for the construction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 79, after the word "the," to strike out "engineer commissioner" and insert "commissioners;" so as to read:

And said sewer connections shall have such traps or other devices as may be required by the commissioners.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 99, after the word "to," to insert "the line of;" so as to read:

The corporators herein named or the corporation hereby created shall not sell or assign any of the rights hereby conferred relating to the line of said road until after the main road hereby authorized shall have been constructed as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 43, after the word "accommodated," to strike out the words:

And if they do, no fare shall be collected from such unaccommodated passenger or passengers.

And in the same section, line 47, after the word "Columbia," to strike out the words:

And for a willful violation of any such regulations said company shall be liable to a fine of $200 for each day on which such regulation shall be violated, such fine to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

So as to read:

The said company shall place first-class cars on said railways, with all modern improvements necessary to the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require, in accordance with a schedule or time-table to be adopted by said board of directors, a copy of which shall be filed with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to be approved by them, and shall not take on any of its cars more passengers than can be accommodated, and shall cause its cars to be heated during the winter season, subject to regulations to be prescribed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 58, after the word "associates," to insert "successors or assigns;" so as to read:

The corporators named in the first section and their associates, successors, or assigns, or a majority of them, or if any refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 37, after the word "mischievously," to insert "and unnecessary;" and in the same section, line 41, before the word "powers," to insert "motive;" so as to read:

The said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of its roadway; and if any person or persons shall willfully and mischievously and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of the cars of said railway with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the motive powers of said railway, or depots, stations, or other property belonging to said railway, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each offense not less than $25 nor more than $100, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall, in addition to said penalty, be liable to said company for any loss or damage occasioned by his, her, or their acts as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 48, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out the following words:

No person shall be prohibited the right to travel on the cars of said road, or be ejected therefrom by the company's employés, for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, or contagiously diseased, for the use of obscene and profane language, refusing to pay the legal fare, or a failure to comply with the lawful regulations of the company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill and ask for a conference on the same.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. FARWELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1540) to establish a port of delivery at Grand Rapids, Mich.;

A bill (H. R. 1645) to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day; and

A bill (H. R. 3405) to protect mechanics, laborers, and servants in their wages.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

The bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein, was announced as the next bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The bill being objected to, it will be passed over under the rule.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Who objected to the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] objects to its present consideration.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that the Senate is proceeding by unanimous consent to take up bills in their order upon the Calendar, subject to objection. The unanimous consent of the Senate, as the Chair understands it, was if any bill should be objected to it should be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I beg pardon of the Chair; but the Senate has it in its power to do what it shall please by a majority vote, notwithstanding the unanimous consent. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Virginia. He simply called his attention to the fact that such a motion would seem to be a breach of the unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. I am inclined to think that under the consent rule the Senator from Virginia has a right to make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would so hold.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think it is a violation of the consent rule, because we consented to go to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII, and Rule VIII distinctly provides for such a motion, if any Senator chooses to make it, after objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding of the Chair is that the unanimous consent goes further than the Senator from Tennessee suggests; but he may be mistaken. The Senator from Virginia moves that, notwithstanding the objection, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which will be read at the desk.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It has passed the Senate three times and has been delayed by that kind of tactics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill will necessarily consume some time. I think this gentleman was dismissed about three times from the Navy. The bill has been reported adversely in the other House repeatedly, and it will be reported adversely again in the other House, as I was informed only last night by a member of the committee there. It would be simply a waste of time for the Senate to consider it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is a kind of reason for not considering a bill which does not commend itself to me. This is a bill which has passed the Senate three times and gone to the other House at the end of a session. It has passed the other House twice and has come to the Senate at the end of a session, and each time it was defeated by one Senator objecting.

I undertake not to threaten anybody, but if I can not have proper consideration of a bill which I bring here from a committee because of the objection of one Senator, I will sit here and I will be a monopolist in the matter of objections. I will see whose bills go through here when one objection can stop them.

I listened yesterday until we reached this bill, and then the Senate went back; and to-day I am told that one Senator can object to it, and it must go over. If one Senator from Missouri can do one thing, I will teach him the lesson that there is a Senator from Virginia who can do the same.

I ask now for the consideration of the bill. I do not propose to make a remark upon it, for Senators here understand the merits of it. They have the certificate of Grant, of Robeson, and of men who know about it, and who have treated it without the malice which emanates from those who have heretofore opposed it. I only ask for a vote on it, and I ask that the Senate shall now consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read from the desk. Upon that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] and wishes to know whether he voted or made the announcement of a pair.

Mr. FAULKNER. I made the announcement of a pair. I stated that I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and, if he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I will take occasion to say that on a motion of this kind ordinarily I do not think it necessary for the Senator from West Virginia to consider himself paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am very glad to hear that such is the understanding of the Senator from Illinois. As I have been deprived of voting for a long time, and expect to be deprived, under my pair, for some time to come, I will avail myself of that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia desire to vote at this time?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 5; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, after the word "authorized," in line 4, to strike out the words:

In his discretion, in consideration of the facts and circumstances hereof, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint John N. Quackenbush a commander in the Navy, and place him on the retired-list as such from the date of such appointment: Provided, That the said John N. Quackenbush shall not be required to refund to the United States any moneys received by him as pay while borne on the rolls as an officer of the Navy.

And to insert:

To place upon the Navy Register the name of Commander John N. Quackenbush in the position it occupied when recently stricken therefrom, and thereupon to transfer said Quackenbush to the retired-list as a commander; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to credit and allow to said Quackenbush his appropriate pay as a commander since the date when their stoppage of his pay took effect.

So as to make the bill read:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to place upon the Navy Register the name of Commander John N. Quackenbush, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER January 31, 1888:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein, submit the following report:

The facts are as follows: In February, 1874, Commander Quackenbush was tried by court-martial for intoxication, convicted, and sentenced to be dismissed the service. On the 9th of June following the President approved this sentence, but immediately thereafter directed a mitigation to a suspension of rank and duty for six years on furlough pay. Since that time to 1883 his name has been borne on the Register in the same relative place it occupied at the time of his conviction and the mitigation as above stated.

On the next day after the President had fixed the degree and character of his punishment, by an inadvertence in sending in nominations to the Senate, the name of W. S. Schley was sent in, nominating him as commander, "vice Quackenbush, dismissed," and this nomination was confirmed. This for the time being (Quackenbush's name being still on the register) made an excess of one on the register; but this was corrected by withholding any nomination subsequently until the proper number was reached, thus recognizing the fact that his name was properly there; that he was not regarded as dismissed, but still an officer serving out his mitigated punishment. After this six years expired he was placed on waiting-orders pay, and thus continued until in March, 1881, when the question was for the first time raised as to his having any legal status as an officer.

This grew out of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Blake case (13 Otto, page 227), in which it was held that when the President nominated one man in place of another, and that nomination was confirmed by the Senate, the effect was to remove the latter from the service altogether. Since that decision the question has arisen whether Schley, having been nominated and confirmed "vice Quackenbush," he was not thereby removed from the service, and the object of this bill is to remove that question.

Assuming that such is the effect of the opinion above alluded to, your committee are of opinion that justice and good faith demand that Commander Quackenbush should be at least restored to the retired-list with the rank he then held.

It is clear that it was not intended to remove him from the Navy. If such had been the intention, the President would not have changed the sentence of dismissal "to suspension of rank and duty for six years on furlough pay," nor would his name have continued on the register and his pay accorded him, nor would he have been placed on waiting orders. He has served out his sentence with the expectation that at the expiration of the time he would be restored to active duty.

Your committee have made inquiries in regard to his deportment during the period of his suspension, and find that it has been unexceptionable. He is a man of high character, and, excepting the offending for which he was court-martialed, his character is without reproach. Since his suspension he has lived a life of sobriety.

Appended herewith will be found the evidence that his sentence was mitigated as hereinbefore stated, that the nomination of Commander Schley vice Quackenbush was a clerical inadvertence, and that his deportment since the time of his sentence has been of the most commendable character.

Your committee therefore report said bill back, and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say something on this bill, but I shall not discuss the propriety or the impropriety of the reinstatement of this officer. I shall direct what I have to say to the question of the retirement of officers.

I deem it proper to say that I was out of the Chamber when the question was put, and that during the roll-call I came in and on making inquiry voted to take up the bill. The vote is inconsistent with any vote I have ever given on such a subject before, and I therefore make this explanation.

I desire, in order to convey the views I have on this question, to read from a report I formerly submitted, on a different occasion and with reference to a different class of officers. The verbiage, of course, refers to another matter, but the views which I desire to present will be apparent.

Under our Constitution and theory of government we respectfully submit it was never contemplated originally that one portion of the people should be taxed for the support of another portion of the people, who are able to take care of themselves. It is right that the soldier or sailor who has been wounded in battle, or otherwise disabled while in the line of his duty in the Army or Navy, and who is thus rendered incapable of supporting himself or his family, should in some measure be relieved by the bounty of the Government, and that the widows and minor children of such soldiers or sailors should be the objects of the care of the Government, but it is a very different question when it is proposed to retire in idleness, and upon life pay, public officers who, more fortunate than others of their countrymen, have been able to secure important public offices with high salary or pay.

Among the self-evident truths mentioned in the Declaration of Independence one is "that all men are created equal." The Constitution provides that "no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States," and that "no State shall grant any title of nobility," thus striking down class distinctions in American society.

That one class of persons should not be deprived of their property for the support of another class of persons, and that private property shall not be taken from the citizen except for public uses, is shown by the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

Under our constitutional form of government it was contemplated that public officers were public servants, to be compensated for their services rendered as such, and that, we submit, is the theory which is most consistent with the doctrines of our free constitutional Republic.

The English Government, for example, is based upon a wholly different theory. Royalty and an aristocracy are there maintained as important agencies of government, or rather as government itself, with all the special privileges that are provided for and attached to each, at the expense of the great mass of the people, who are called subjects. The sovereign and the aristocracy there are upheld by being invested with special privileges not common to the people, and the ranks of the aristocracy are from time to time recruited by additions from persons who have distinguished themselves in some of the walks of life, and upon whom titles and dignities are conferred, together with high salaries, emoluments, or pensions drawn from the common revenues for the support of their titles and dignity. And it is the policy of that country, as a means of preserving classes and distinctions in society, to confer upon all public officers high salaries, and to create extensive lists of retired officers upon high pay drawn from the toil and taxes of the people.

If we are to follow their example by adopting the policy of high salaries, and of providing for the retirement from the public service of public officers on high pay, we will have gone a long way towards establishing an office-holding and privileged class, which will be our aristocracy at the expense of the toiling millions of non-office-holding and non-privileged people, and we will in this commit the great wrong intended to be provided against by the Constitution, of taking private property from one class of the people and giving it to another class without compensating the owners for it.

In answer to this it will be said that we are then to avail ourselves of the services of officers during all the period of their vigorous manhood, and then turn them out to die of neglect and in poverty when they are no longer able to perform their public duties. This is a strong figure of speech, but wanting in truth. To this the reply might well be made that many are retired on pay who are not at all disabled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas must be reminded by the Chair that his time has expired.

Mr. COCKRELL. The five-minute rule is not in force.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it, under the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all; I beg the Chair's pardon. By vote of the Senate, it has been ordered to be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be so.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt of it. The vote of the Senate has set that aside. We are not under any five-minute rule now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. I continue from the report:

To this the reply might well be made that many are retired on pay who are not at all disabled and who have ample means of support, independently of their pay as retired officers; and that they should not be retired on pay at all events when either of these conditions exists. But this relates only to the abuse of the power. We object to the system; and so objecting say, in answer to the objection, that we avail ourselves of their services while they are well and strong, and turn them out when worn out and poor; that if that state of facts exists as a rule, it is because of the improvidence and prodigality of such officers, in wasting their large salaries during service. We now retire the judges of the Federal courts on full pay after they become seventy years old, if they have served ten years as such. (Rev. Stat. sec. 714.) The Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States receives a salary of $10,500 a year, and the associate justices receive $10,000 a year each. The circuit judges receive $6,000 a year each. The judges of the Court of Claims receive $4,500 a year each. The judges of the district courts receive from $3,500 to $4,500 per annum each. It must be understood that mendicants are not appointed to such positions.

The pay of the General of the Army is $13,500 a year—

When these views were submitted we had a General of the Army.

The pay of the General of the Army is $13,500 a year; Lieutenant-General, $11,000 a year; major-general, $7,500 a year; brigadier-general, $5,500 a year; colonel, $3,500 a year; lieutenant-colonel, $3,000 a year; major, $2,500 a year; captain (mounted), $2,000 a year; captain (not mounted), $1,800 a year; adjutant, $1,800 a year; regimental quartermaster, $1,800 a year; first lieutenant (mounted), $1,600 a year; first lieutenant (not mounted), $1,500 a year; second lieutenant (mounted), $1,500 a year; second lieutenant (not mounted), $1,400 a year; and the balance of the officers of the Army are paid in the same proportion. In addition to this there is "allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent. of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service."

But this increase of pay is in no case to exceed 40 per cent. of the pay of the officers as provided by law. These officers are also allowed rations, and when mounted are allowed forage, so that they can save the greater part of their pay. And if these have served forty consecutive years as commissioned officers they may on their own application be retired; or when they have been thirty years in the service, they may on their own applications, in the discretion of the President, and when any officer has served forty-five years as a commissioned officer, or is sixty-two years old, he may be retired from active service by the President, and these officers when so retired are to receive 75 per cent. of the yearly pay of the rank upon which they are so retired.

I quote the salaries of these officers:

In the Navy the pay of the officers is as follows: Admiral, $13,000 a year; Vice-Admiral, $9,000 a year; rear-admirals, $6,000 a year; commodores, $5,000 a year; captains, $4,500 a year; commanders, $3,500 a year; lieutenant-commanders, first four years from date of commission, $2,800; after four years from date of commission, $3,000.

Lieutenants: First five years from date of commission, $2,400; after five years from date of commission, $2,600.

Lieutenants (junior grade): First five years from date of commission, $1,800; after five years from date of commission, $2,000.

Engineers: First five years after date of commission, $1,200; after five years from date of commission, $1,400.

Ensigns (junior grade), $1,000; and other officers of the Navy receive corresponding rates of compensation.

* * * * * * *

There are now in the revenue-marine service 31 captains, receiving an annual compensation of $2,500 each; 34 first lieutenants, receiving an annual compensation of $1,800 each; 34 second lieutenants, receiving an annual compensation of $1,500 each; 26 third lieutenants, receiving an annual compensation of $1,200 each; 10 cadets, receiving an annual compensation of $900 each; 23 chief engineers, receiving an annual compensation of $1,800 each; 18 first assistant engineers, receiving an annual compensation of $1,500 each; and 27 second assistant engineers, receiving an annual compensation of $1,200 each.

Under chapter 3 of the Revised Statutes, when an officer of the Navy has been forty years in the service of the United States, he may be retired from active service; and when sixty years old shall be retired, if below the rank of vice-admiral and above the rank of lieutenant-commander. Lieutenant-commanders and those of lower rank are not to be placed on the retired-list except on account of physical or mental disability. In addition to their pay these officers receive the rations due to their rank, and the law provides for allowances which increase the emoluments of both the officers of the Army and Navy; and, on being retired from active service after forty-five years' service, after reaching the age of sixty years, or who have, or may be retired after forty years' service upon their own application, or on attaining sixty-two years of age, or on account of incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, or from sickness or exposure therein, their pay shall be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay provided by law. The pay of other officers on the retired-list shall, when not on active duty, be equal to one-half the sea-pay provided by law.

Under section 1622 of the Revised Statutes it is provided that the commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall be retired in like cases, in the same manner, and with the same relative conditions in all respects as are provided for officers of the Army. And under section 1612 of the Revised Statutes officers of the Marine Corps are entitled to receive the same pay and allowances as those of a like grade in the infantry of the Army.

The foregoing statements in relation to the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps are introduced to show that with the salaries allowed the officers in these branches of the service, if they will exercise that sort of economy which people in other walks of life are compelled to exercise, they ought, as a rule, to be either rich or well off at the end of a term of forty or forty-five years' service instead of becoming paupers and dependent on appropriations from the public Treasury for their support. If the policy of supporting them for life after they are retired from the public service be adopted, then their pay during the years of service ought to be reduced so as to protect them against habits of extravagance and dissipation. If they choose with the rates of pay now allowed them to spend their money in luxurious extravagance or in debasing dissipation, we submit that by so doing they justly forfeit any claim to the bounty of the Government for their support in their retirement.

There is no moral and there should be no legal obligation on the people of our Republic to tax themselves, to take from themselves the earnings of their toil, and the saving of their frugality, in order to support those who, by extravagance and folly, waste the bounty of the Government, which, if preserved with frugality, would be amply sufficient for their support in old age. The opposite policy, that which now prevails with reference to the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, simply means that we are to have favored and privileged classes who are to be supported by the labors of others; in fact, an American aristocracy. It can hardly be doubted that many of the officers of the Army and Navy now regard themselves as entitled to extraordinary considerations and privileges; and that they are forgetful of the fact that they are the servants of the very people upon whom they affect to look with contempt.

So it will be seen we are combating the whole system of retiring public officers on pay, not simply to retirement on pay of the officers of the revenue marine.

What better title has a public officer to such bounty of the Government than a private citizen, who may have lived honestly, and worked hard during all the period of his vigorous manhood, perhaps reared a family of children, and performed all his public duties? The officer being more fortunate than the private citizen, obtains an honorable and lucrative position, which thousands of others may have desired but could not obtain. He enjoys, as a rule, more leisure than the private citizen; is the recipient of more consideration; has greater social advantages, and his pay and emoluments are greater, as a rule. Is it because of his good fortune and better situation in life that at the end of his active service he is to be retired on pay out of other people's money, whether he has been provident or improvident, and whether he is rich or poor?

During the recent war, as an inducement to men to enter and remain in the service, as well as from a desire to compensate them in some measure for their services and sacrifices, and because of the depreciation of the currency, the pay of those engaged in the military operations was increased beyond what it was before that time. And after the war, and up to the year 1870, those who remained in the Army and Navy, taking advantage of the patriotic pride of the country in its then recent military achievements, and profiting by the demagogy which sought votes and support from those who had served in the Army, secured legislation which increased their pay and allowances to the present figures, and beyond all reason, while in the service, and also pay as hereinbefore stated after their retirement from the service. Think of a brigadier-general in time of peace getting $5,500 a year, besides all of his extra allowances; and at the same time of Senators and Representatives in Congress, who do infinitely more labor as a rule, and who are charged with the consideration and determination of the most important questions of governmental policy, elected for limited terms, who receive $5,000 a year!

We have seen that provisions are made by law for the retirement on pay of judicial, military, and naval officers, and the officers of the Marine Corps.

I go on to enumerate a large number of other bills which were then pending where this occurred, to show the tendency to create an army of retired men in various positions of life.

Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate by the unnecessary prolongation of the discussion of this subject, but I do wish to emphasize the fact that in this country, and especially where officers receive the enormous pay that they now get, far above what can be obtained for like services and occupations in private life, we have no right to tax the toiling millions of this country, to tax men as good as they are, men who labor harder, men who have fewer honors, to maintain them in retirement after their active service. They have no more right to claim it than would any other citizen finding himself in like condition be entitled to appeal to the rest of the country for support after he is unable to work.

The uniform theory and practice of the Government until about twenty-five years ago was that when an officer was appointed upon a salary prescribed by law he was to perform his duty and receive his pay, and when he went out of the service he was to become as other men, a private citizen, dependent upon his own labor for his support. This for three-quarters of a century was the practice of this country when it was conforming to the theory of a republic. If our purpose is to change the character of this Government, if our purpose is to build up an aristocracy, and to have our millions of subjects in the sense that Great Britain has them, instead of citizens in the sense of our Constitution and Government, the way to do it is to establish privileged classes, supported off the labor of others and from means they never earned.

Who that looks over the salaries paid to these officers does not know that with ordinary economy, with ordinary frugality, by the time they come to be retired any of them could have ample means to live on in comfort the remainder of his life? If we are to adopt the plan of retiring classes on pay during life we ought then certainly, as I said a little while ago, to reduce their pay so as to teach them frugality before they go into private life and not give them such salaries as I have mentioned here.

A captain in the Navy receives $4,500 a year. There are few States in the Union which give their governors and the judges of their supreme courts so much. Most States give greatly less than that to men who perform as a rule, on an average, five times as much service as these captains of the Navy in time of peace.

Why should this be so? Are we to give over this Government to classes? Are we to introduce and support and extend the idea of privileged classes and an American aristocracy? If so, we may well say farewell to our Republican system of government. That is the very point which distinguishes our Government from the governments of monarchical Europe. It is the equality of the citizen before the law and under the Constitution. It is the fact that we have no privileged classes who have a right to lord it over the rest of the community and live off of the fruits of the toil of other people.

I know the pleas which are introduced for the purpose of sustaining this character of legislation. It is that these men serve during the prime of their lives. If they serve during the prime of their lives and are entitled to this pay, why not extend it to the private soldier, the marine, and the sailor, who are more impoverished than the officers we attempt to benefit by such legislation? If we intend to be just, if we intend to be charitable, why not begin where charity is most needed? Why bestow our alms upon the rich and the powerful, and leave in poverty and neglect those who perform longer service in less consequential positions?

I did not expect to say this much, Mr. President, but I desire on all occasions when class legislation of this kind comes up to enter my earnest and solemn protest against its continuance. I would to God we could to-day repeal every law that retires an officer of this Government on pay.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill. I am opposed to the principle asserted in it and the policy. I agree fully with the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in his comments upon the impropriety of placing upon the retired-list every one who may have been connected with the military or naval service.

This is not an ordinary case. This is not an ordinary individual. He is, if not distinguished, at least notorious in the records of the Navy Department. He was a naval cadet and was dismissed for drunkenness. He was afterwards put into the Navy and there tried by court-martial for drunkenness and dismissed. He has once before been restored by act of Congress, and now he again appeals for another act of Congress to place him upon the retired-list that he may thenceforth draw three-fourths of his pay for life. His case has been under discussion more or less ever since 1874, and in fact it has been a case almost ever since Quackenbush went into the Navy, because he commenced his career with drunkenness as a cadet and was dismissed as such, and he has been figuring conspicuously ever since.

I hold in my hand a full statement of this case which was prepared by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] whilst he was Secretary of the Navy in 1885, and was addressed to a distinguished Senator now a member of this body. The bill then pending was Senate bill 2152. That bill, as this bill does, named Quackenbush five times in the preamble and twice in the body of the act, and was drawn solely with the view of effecting his appointment to the office he once held as commander in the Navy. That bill and this bill, the report in that case and this report, and all the reports which have been made in the case, carefully conceal the important facts in the case.

The report which has been read here states that Quackenbush, a commander in the Navy, was on the 9th of June, 1874, in pursuance and in mitigation of a court-martial sentence, suspended by the President for six years on furlough pay. It conceals the crime for which he was tried by court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed. It does not state what offense he was tried for, or what was his sentence. The same kind of a report was made in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses. All they say is that he was tried by a naval court-martial in February, 1874, and sentenced to dismissal.

Now, what are the facts in regard to that trial? What are the official records of the Government of the United States? What is the naval record of Quackenbush? What is the record he has made himself and upon which he has the effrontery to stand before the United States Senate and demand that he shall be placed back upon the Navy list, perhaps again to disgrace it? Now, I will give the record:

On the 9th of June, 1871, Commander Quackenbush was ordered to command the United States steamer Wasp, on the South Atlantic Station. He remained in command of that vessel until February 17, 1873, when he was detached, ordered home, and placed on waiting orders. In February, 1874, he was tried before a general court-martial on the following charges and specifications—

Forming part of his naval record.

CHARGE I. "Drunkenness."

Specification 1. "That on or about the 16th day of May, in the year 1872, the said Commander J. N. Quackenbush, then in command of the United States steamer Wasp, was drunk on board the English mail steamer Douro, at Montevideo."

Specification 2. "In this, that on or about the 20th day of June, in the year 1872, the said Commander J. N. Quackenbush, then in command of the United States steamer Wasp, was drunk on board the said vessel, at Colonia, Uruguay."

Specification 3. "In this, that on or about the 28th day of June, in the year 1872, the said Commander J. N. Quackenbush, then in command of the United States steamer Wasp, was scandalously drunk."

Not an ordinary, common debauch, but—scandalously drunk at a ball given by the Club Libertad, at Montevideo, and deported himself in such a manner as to disgrace the uniform of an officer of the United States Navy.

CHARGE II. Scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals.

Specification 1. In this, that during the months of April, May, and June, in the year 1872, the said Commander J. N. Quackenbush, being then in command of the United States steamer Wasp, indulged to excess in the use of intoxicating liquor.

Specification 2. In this, that on or about the 3d day of June, in the year 1872, the said Commander J. N. Quackenbush, then in command of the United States steamer Wasp, in consequence of excessive use of intoxicating liquor, was in such a condition as to require to be medically treated for alcoholism.

These are the charges and specifications forming part of the naval record of Commander Quackenbush in the Navy. He was arraigned upon these charges and specifications before a duly constituted naval court, and I will state the result:

Commander Quackenbush was found guilty of all the specifications, and both the charges.

He was found guilty of all the specifications and also of both the charges, and one of them was the charge of being "scandalously drunk," "in such a manner as to disgrace the uniform of an officer of the United States Navy." I am not making this record. It is the foot-print upon the sands of time made by Quackenbush's own conduct. I would to God that no naval officer ever had made such a record.

The sentence of dismissal was confirmed by the President on the 5th of June, 1874, and, in a letter dated the 9th of the same month, the Department informed Commander Quackenbush of the sentence of the court and the action of the President thereon, and that he would from that date "cease to be an officer in the Navy."

There is the record of the President and there is the notice given to the offender.

It further appears that Commander Quackenbush commenced his naval career with drunkenness.

"Conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity."

September 24, 1847, he became a midshipman and served on shipboard and at the Naval Academy; and January 3, 1854, he was dismissed by the following letter:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 3, 1854.

"SIR: As you have been again reported—

Not a first offense—

"As you have been again reported to the Department for drunkenness, I have to inform you that you are dismissed from the service, and will, from this date, no longer be regarded a midshipman in the Navy.

"I am, respectfully, etc.,

"J. C. DOBBIN,
"Secretary of the Navy.

"Midshipman JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH,
"Naval Academy."

May 13, 1861, Mr. Quackenbush was appointed an acting lieutenant in the Navy. On two examinations—

I call the attention of Senators to this fact.

On two examinations as to his mental, moral, and professional fitness for promotion he was reported as disqualified, and thus at last forced on the retired-list.

On two separate examinations as to his mental, moral, and physical fitness for promotion he was reported by boards of naval officers as disqualified for promotion, and thus at last forced upon the retired-list.

Now what? Congress by a special act restored him to the active-list after having been twice found unfit for promotion on the active-list, and he was placed on the retired-list; and then comes in the potency of his social and political influences in securing the passage of an act of Congress to take him from the retired-list and place him upon the active-list.

The abstract of his record herewith transmitted shows how he managed to pass his examination for promotion.

Three years after he was placed upon the retired-list by a special act of Congress he was tried for drunkenness and dismissed. Congress placed a vessel worth, perchance, millions of dollars, and the lives of hundreds of sailors in the hands of this drunken officer. Congress took him from the retired-list and placed him in the command of a vessel, and placed him upon the high seas with the property of the Government and the lives of its citizens in his hands; and how did he discharge that trust after that magnanimous action on the part of Congress? Drunk, scandalously drunk, tried by court-martial, and dismissed again. Here is the record.

Now, what is the pretext for his restoration? As you will discover, the bill which was first introduced here to appoint him by and with the advice and consent of the Senate is proposed to be stricken out, and by the pending amendment the President is directed "to place upon the Navy Register the name of Commander John N. Quackenbush in the position it occupied when recently stricken therefrom, and thereupon to transfer said Quackenbush to the retired-list as a commander;" and then the bill orders that he shall be paid from what time? All arrears of pay since 1880. I believe he received pay up to 1880, and now he is to be paid for the past eight years, during which he rendered no service, directly or indirectly, to the Government.

This is a generous offer to place him upon the retired-list with the rank of commander and give him eight years' back pay as commander, and then for life give him 75 per cent. of his pay as commander.

What is the fact from which it is argued that Mr. Quackenbush should be restored to the Navy? The President had, June 5, 1874, approved his sentence of dismissal. He had on June 9, 1874, actually dismissed him.

I wish the Senate to understand distinctly that he was dismissed by the sentence of the court-martial approved by the President on the 5th of June, 1874, and notice of that dismissal was furnished him on the 9th day of June, 1874, and from that date he ceased to be an officer. But here comes in the pretext and the subterfuge that on the 8th day of December, 1874, six months after the sentence of dismissal had been confirmed and proclaimed, Secretary Robeson, then the Secretary of the Navy, addressed to Quackenbush a letter stating that his sentence had been, on the 9th of June, 1874, mitigated "to suspension of rank and duty for six years on furlough pay." It took the Secretary of the Navy six months to ascertain that fact, after he had issued under his hand and the seal of his office a notice to this man that he had been dismissed and ceased to be an officer.

Whence did that very important information come? How did it reach Secretary Robeson? How was it withheld from him for six long months? How was it concealed? Why was it not communicated immediately after the order of June 9, stating that the sentence had been approved and he ceased to be an officer? I challenge any living mortal to explain that.

A letter is also produced from ex-President Grant, dated February 10, 1882, nearly eight years after the transaction, and a letter from Secretary Robeson, dated February 18, 1882, in which they say they are quite sure the sentence was mitigated June 9, 1874. Eight years afterwards the President and the Secretary were called upon and they write letters, in which the ex-President and the ex-Secretary state that they are quite sure the sentence was mitigated June 9, 1874.

Without intending any reflection upon the distinguished signers of these letters, it is permissible to say at least that it will not be wise to base action upon the recollection of ex-officers eight years after official transactions have occurred, the effect of which as recorded by themselves they seek to vary by their subsequent unofficial statement.

The record shows plainly, unequivocally, and unmistakably a formal dismissal of Quackenbush on the 9th day of June, 1874; and that record is confirmed by the records of this body, because on the 10th day of June, 1874, the very next day, W. S. Schley was nominated to the Senate by President Grant himself "vice Quackenbush, dismissed." There it stands upon the records of the Senate, and yet we are called upon to state that the recollection of President Grant and Secretary Robeson must be taken eight years after they proclaimed this sentence of dismissal and the President sent the nomination of Schley to the Senate "vice Quackenbush, dismissed."

Schley was confirmed June 12, 1874.

No record whatever of the alleged mitigation has ever appeared.

Human eye has never seen the words written upon paper or elsewhere showing any trace, any fading of that mitigation. It is a castle in the air; it is imagination. It has had no local habitation in pen and ink or upon earth.

No record whatever of the alleged mitigation has ever appeared; and no such record was in fact ever made, either on the 9th of June or at any time afterwards; only on the 8th of December the Secretary—

December 8, 1874, six months after the dismissal, Secretary Robeson—wrote a letter stating that the sentence had been in fact mitigated June 9.

And yet he makes no record of it.

Cotemporaneous evidence of mitigation is entirely wanting.

We are called upon to say here by solemn act of Congress that the President on the 9th of June, 1874, mitigated that sentence to suspension for six years, when not a trace of a record, not a trace of an affidavit by any man competent to make it, is here. All that we have in the shape of a record is a letter written by the same Secretary who issued the order of dismissal and published it abroad, written six months afterwards, stating that it had been mitigated on the 9th of June. It took him six months to find it out. Here we have corroborative evidence, cotemporaneous evidence of the dismissal. On the 10th day of June, the next day after, the President of the United States sent the nomination of W. S. Schley as the successor to Quackenbush to the Senate, and in the message he said, "to be commander, vice Quackenbush, dismissed."

There is the record of the court-martial; there is the order of promulgation on the 9th of June, and on the 10th of June there is the nomination of the successor; and yet we are asked credulously to believe that that is all a fiction; that it was not a dismissal; that it was only a suspension for six years. The Senate of the United States is called upon to affirm that that is all a myth; that there was no dismissal, no nomination of a successor; oh, no, it was all a mere suspension for six years.

Now, let us see what there is intervening between June, 1874, and December.

June 12, 1874, the Secretary—

The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Robeson—wrote Mr. Quackenbush at Boston to return the letter of dismissal—

What influence had been brought to bear in the mean time I do not know—and on June 15 it was so returned.

This may indicate possibly that pressure was being brought to bear, and they intended if they could to mitigate the sentence. But this was after another name had been sent to the Senate in lieu of the dismissed officer and it was confirmed. I say this may indicate an intention in the mind of the Secretary to attempt to review the case and reverse the dismissal, but he, in fact, made no such attempt, made no such effort until December 8, 1874, six months afterward, and the very circumstance that he wrote the letter of June 12, and yet did nothing till December 8, is very strong evidence that no mitigation had been in fact made on the 9th of June, 1874. The fact is that on the 15th of June he wrote for the return of this letter of dismissal and it was returned, and as nothing was done it only confirms the fact that no mitigation was made at that time. If so, why did he not notify him at once? Why did he let six months elapse before he told him that it was a suspension? If the order of suspension was not made on the latter date, the 9th of June, it could not be made afterward. It was out of the power of the Secretary of the Navy or the President to make any order changing the sentence after Mr. Schley had been nominated to the Senate and confirmed. Their power ceased; they could by no order affect the status of Quackenbush. His condition then was beyond the reach or the Executive power without the concurrence of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, we have the facts in this case. As I said, the bill directs the President "to place upon the Navy Register the name of Commander John N. Quackenbush in the position it occupied when recently stricken therefrom, and thereupon to transfer said Quackenbush to the retired-list as a commander; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to credit and allow to said Quackenbush his appropriate pay as a commander since the date when their stoppage of his pay took effect."

It is proposed to give him eight years' arrears of pay when he has rendered no equivalent service to the United States. This is a magnificent, generous donation to Commander Quackenbush for his distinguished services in the Navy, for the distinguished record which he has made, he being dismissed for drunkenness when a cadet; he being twice examined for promotion and found deficient and unqualified for promotion, and then placed upon the retired-list, and then by act of Congress taken from the retired-list and placed upon the active-list in command of a vessel, and there month after month in drunken debauch, scandalously drunk, till he was forced before a court-martial, and then sentenced to be dismissed, and that sentence was approved! He is a worthy object of eight years' arrears of pay, and it is a most excellent way to exhaust the surplus in the Treasury!

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in connection with this bill. I did not know it was under consideration until I came into the Senate a few moments ago.

I know Mr. Quackenbush; I have known him for some years; and I have looked into this case and made myself somewhat familiar with it. The case simply is this: A young man, contracting bad habits and suffering from them, was suspended from the service for six years. He was first ordered to be dismissed. The Navy Department, however, in the exercise of its judgment mitigated that penalty to a suspension of six years. He thereupon had the right to believe that by a proper life while he was undergoing his punishment, he could restore himself to the confidence of his official superiors and regain his character.

In the report which I have here the committee unanimously say that during his suspension, which was from 1874 to 1880, a period of six years, he lived an absolutely sober and upright life, and I know that he has done so since. I have known him for more than eight years myself. A more exemplary, cleanly, decent life, no man has maintained than Mr. Quackenbush.

Those who can see no forgiveness for a fault will vote against him. Those who can see atonement in a complete reformation, steadfast and true, will feel as I do, that this man ought to have another chance.

The value of restoration is not in its pecuniary compensation. There is that, however, in the human mind that desires to be placed back again on that footing where one has been who has had trials in his life. This man has lived all these years as upright and as proper a life as any man in the United States, in the hope, and sustained by the hope, that sooner or later this judgment, severe as it was, perhaps not too severe, would be reversed; that he could make atonement; and unless this man can be allowed this atonement and this restoration it is hardly worth while that the hope should be held out to anybody hereafter.

Mr. HOAR. May I interrupt the honorable Senator?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask him if the case is not a little stronger for this person than he himself states it?

Mr. VOORHEES. Possibly it is.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted to interrupt the Senator one moment I will state that he does not ask the reversal of any judgment.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is true.

Mr. HOAR. He has asked simply his legal right. I will state what his case is exactly like, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was coming to that point, but I yield.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose a man had been sentenced to the State prison for a gross and wicked act for six years, and after the six years were over they should undertake to keep him in the State prison for the rest of his life, and he should go to the appropriate legal tribunal established by the country for a habeas corpus, and the Supreme Court should say, "We know just what the thing is the man did for which he was put in State prison; we will not give any habeas corpus for you; you shall not have your remedy."

This man was sentenced to suspension for six years and not a day more; and that is proved by the letters of Ulysses S. Grant and his Secretary of the Navy, both certifying that the man's sentence was commuted, and that he was only suspended for six years. That is all, and at the end of that time he had as absolute a legal right to go back to his place as the Senator or I have to sit down in our seats in this Chamber.

He had a right to go back on the rolls of the Navy and to receive the pay, but it turned out that by sheer mistake President Grant sent in the next officer that he nominated, a Mr. Schley, "vice Quackenbush," and by a subsequently, long afterwards made decision of the Attorney-General and of the Supreme Court of the United States in another case, in the Blake case, it was held that putting in the word "vice" operated as a removal of this man, against the intention of President Grant, as stated in his letter, and against the intention of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DAWES. It was held that it removed him from the Navy entirely.

Mr. HOAR. That it removed him from the Navy entirely. Now he comes to the only tribunal which the country has established, to wit, Congress, asking to have his legal right declared, and nothing more. If when a man has been punished for six years he is held liable to be punished longer, and if when he asks his legal right, after the six years are over, it is decent to say, "Why, you were so bad a man you had to be punished for six years, and therefore you shall not have any legal rights for the rest of your life," then we should vote down this bill. If that is not the case, we should vote for it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for making the speech which I intended to try to make, but he has made it so much better than I should have made it that I am very glad he did so. I was coming along in the same line in my lame and faltering way.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon. I meant to say merely that Commander Quackenbush had not asked to have the decision reversed.

Mr. VOORHEES. The word I used was not the word I ought to have used. The word "reversal" was not the correct word, because he does not ask a reversal of the judgment at all. He has paid the penalty, suffered it out, and when I used the word "reversal" I meant the reversal of the judgment of his comrades and the people; that is to say, he asks Congress to remove from his record the stain that had been placed upon it. I was not thinking so much of the legal finding when I used the word "reversal," and I stand corrected.

I have very little more now to say, because I will just adopt the Senator's speech as mine. It was very much better made than my own, and I shall gain credit thereby. But I was going to say that this gentleman is barred, if barred at all, by an accident in the executive department of the Government. It was not intended to supply his place on the Navy Register. When he was suspended, as everybody knows, it goes without arguing, he had the legal right to expect that when the time of his suspension expired his rights would arise again. In the mean time he was deprived of them, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, and as the report which I have been looking at and have in my hand also states, by the word "dismissed" following his name in the nomination of Mr. Schley.

He was not dismissed. He was for the time being, say a few months, dismissed; and then, what seems to me greatly in his favor, immediately and in close proximity to his offense, there were mitigating circumstances found, when his offense, however heinous it may have been, was fresh in the minds of the Department. General Grant was not a lenient man to offenses of this kind; the Navy Department was run on very proper principles, so far as discipline was concerned, at that time; and it was seen that there was something in this young man's conduct which authorized and warranted a mitigation from a cruel dismissal into a suspension of six years, which told him that he should live those six years with the chance and with the hope of restoration. In the mean time this accident came upon the record to bar him. He has not been discouraged by it. He has not thrown his life away, and I, for one, believe in helping those who try to help themselves.

Possibly if I did not know this gentleman, a refined, cultivated, gentlemanly man, and his family I might—no, I would not join in the severe condemnation of the Senator from Missouri. We are all as the great Father above has made us. I can not sit harshly upon my fellowman for offenses that do not imply criminality, malignancy, fraud, or dishonor. If every young man, or young or old for that matter, is to be pelted with stones who has stumbled and fallen in this world of seduction and temptation, I do not intend to be of the party to throw them. I believe this man has atoned for his fault; I believe he has lived a life that is a guaranty for the future; and I shall vote for this bill with that satisfaction which I always feel when helping one who is seeking to restore his manhood to the respect of his countrymen and to the favor of his Maker; and this I firmly believe to be the conduct of Commander Quackenbush.

The Senator from Missouri dwelt upon a remark to the effect that he was "scandalously drunk." Of course he was, if he was drunk at all. Why talk about adjectives in that connection? For a man to intoxicate himself, and especially when upon high duty, as he was, is a scandal. The Senator from Missouri says he was scandalously drunk at a ball. That is a scandal also, and while a man ought to get drunk at no place, he certainly ought not to get drunk at a ball.

But in connection with these harsh and painful words falling from the Senator's lips, I notice he said that this man had great social and political influence, and had had a bill once passed to assist him. "Great social and political influence." Well, he is not a vagabond, then. I think a man with great social and political influence is very apt to be leading a decent life, and while condemning him on the one hand the Senator from Missouri spoke words to show that he was worthy of the highest consideration on the other.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate for more than two or three minutes, and that only to make up a part of the record in this matter by reading a letter of the late President Grant and of Secretary George M. Robeson. It has not been distinctly stated that the committee took the view of the case that Mr. Quackenbush was at no time out of the Navy. He was suspended for six years, and President Grant, not President at the time he wrote the letter, but who was President at the time of the suspension, says that the sending of the nomination in the form it came to the Senate was a clerical error. The letter reads as I shall read it now:

NEW YORK CITY, February 10, 1882.

The PRESIDENT:

The case of Commander J. N. Quackenbush, United States Navy, sentenced to be dismissed in 1874, has just been called to my attention, with the hardship attending his case by reason of inadvertency in the nomination of his successor after his sentence had been commuted.

You observe, Mr. President, that the successor was nominated after the commutation of sentence.

The matter of nomination or promotion in the Army and Navy is regulated by law so that the Executive scarcely thinks to look at the nominations when they are put before him, supposing, of course, they are to fill vacancies. In this way it seems Commander Quackenbush was superseded, and now finds himself in danger of being out of the Navy by a recent decision in another case.

I remember of Commander Quackenbush, but not the details of my action. I have no doubt, however, but that Hon. George M. Robeson, then Secretary of the Navy, knows and remembers all about it.

I do know, however, the intention was not to put him out of the service, and I now recommend his nomination to the vacancy, which was kept open for him from the time of the first vacancy after the promotion of Schley.

The fact that executive action was delayed so long in the case of Commander Quackenbush, at the request of Mr. Samuel Howe, shows quite conclusively that the approval of the sentence and commutation were done at one and the same time.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate particularly to this concluding sentence:

My decision was probably given verbally to the Secretary, and the mistake in the record has been made by a clerk.

Very truly, yours,

U. S. GRANT.

Then follows a letter from Secretary Robeson because of this reference of President Grant to him:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 16, 1882.

To the PRESIDENT:

In the case of Commander J. N. Quackenbush, who was sentenced by court-martial in February, 1874, to dismissal from the Navy, no action was taken by the President for many weeks. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, with her niece, the wife of Commander Quackenbush, called upon me in regard to this case, and I told them that they needed the direct action of the President, and they must go at once to him, which they did. The same day, after their interview, President Grant, on seeing me, took up the case for consideration, and after carefully going over it the President told me that he had delayed previous consideration of the case at the solicitation of his friend, Dr. Samuel G. Howe, of Boston, who, on the eve of sailing for St. Domingo for his health, made this request. Dr. Howe, as Mrs. Howe stated, having just returned from St. Domingo, was on his way to see the President about this case, and was to meet his niece, Mrs. Quackenbush, in Washington, but was kept in New York by sudden illness. In his absence his wife and Mrs. Quackenbush had come. On going over the case with me the President approved the findings, but directed mitigation of the sentence to probation on furlough pay; this was fixed at six years subsequent to the 9th of June, 1874.

The action of approval and mitigation was at one and the same time, whatever the records in the Department may appear to show. The direction to me being verbal, and a letter being sent by me at once to Commander Quackenbush, and afterwards in December, the letter promulgating the finding and mitigation, I may have rested content with my action, and neglected to order, or to make full indorsement on the records.

The nomination of Schley "vice Quackenbush" went through in some incomprehensible manner, and when brought to my attention, as it made an excess of numbers, I ordered no nominations to be made for the position shortly after vacated by the retirement of Morris, which reduced the number of commanders to legal limits.

It will be a great act of injustice if Commander Quackenbush, after serving out his sentence, shall not be retained in the Navy.

Mr. President, I have but one comment to make, and that is in reply to one observation made by the Senator from Missouri. I will not be so unkind as to say that he only made one observation that it is necessary to notice, though I can mighty nearly "ring the bell" that he did. The Senator from Missouri said that there is no cotemporaneous evidence. There is the cotemporaneous evidence. There is the statement of a man who when he was dying could complete the second volume of his own memoirs. From what did the Senator from Missouri read? It was my good fortune in walking around the Chamber to notice that the letter from which he read was in type-writing, and it contained more information than he is likely to get outside of the Ebbitt House.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word in response to something that was said by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

I said nothing in regard to the details of the case and do not propose to consider them. I look only at that feature of the measure which is to put on the retired-list on pay a person who was once an officer of the Navy, but has rendered no service for years. The Senator from Indiana, whose great heart bubbles over with kindness and charity, seems to forget that some one has to earn the money to be allowed this man for six years' back pay when no service was rendered and the money for the lifetime of pay that is to come after. Who is to furnish that money? We do not pay the money out of our own pockets. Thousands of the Senator's constituents, poorer, no doubt, more oppressed, and more needy than this man, are to be taxed to support this man, to pay back pay for six years and forward pay for a lifetime.

I am not going into the points so ably made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] about the particular facts of this case. I only refer to the general policy of retiring men from the public service on pay. I repeat that the whole system is wrong and unsustainable by any reason under our republican form of government. An officer gets a good salary during his term of service; he may get honors and consideration on account of his position. This man received large pay while performing his duty as commander in the Navy from the time he entered that rank, and received enough salary to furnish him the means to live in ease the rest of his life.

If he has chosen a life of dissipation—I do not care whether he has stopped now or not—if he has chosen a life that has deprived him of the means of livelihood hereafter, what right has he now to say that the millions of honest toilers in this country shall work and sweat to keep him in idleness the rest of his life? If he has been unfortunate, is that a reason why others should be taxed for his benefit? It seems to me we ought to remember when we are conferring benefits that we are not conferring them out of our own pockets, but that we are conferring them out of the earnings and sweat of other people.

I repeat—I suppose the Senator did not hear what I said—that the whole idea of a retired-list, commencing with the judiciary and extending through the military, through the naval establishment, and the marine service, is unrepublican, not in conformity with our theory of government, creates a privileged class, conferring privileges on that class not enjoyed by other people, in violation of our whole theory of government, and it ought to be abandoned. When a man accepts public office he ought to expect when he retires from that office to do like other people and take care of himself.

That was our plan until we fell into this way of commencing to build up an American aristocracy, which, if it goes much further, must change the whole theory of this Government and create privileged classes to be fed and sustained by others. We should then be a nation of subjects instead of a nation of citizens with equal privileges before the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE, in the chair). The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to the amendment and want that statement placed on record.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I concur very fully in the views expressed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in reference to the propriety of building up a civil pension-list in this country, and I would vote for a law abrogating all efforts of that kind heretofore effected; but I am not opposed to pensions for wounds or injuries contracted or disease incurred in the military or naval service. In reference to this particular case, I understand from the letter of General Grant, which was read by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], and from the letter of Secretary Robeson, that this man was an unfortunate victim of inadvertence on the part of the Navy Department; that if there had not been an inadvertence he would have been entitled years ago to the position which he now asks.

I have no doubt the Department acted wisely in suspending him; but it is evident by the action of President Grant and Secretary Robeson that their action as then intended was a suspension and was a wise act, and I approve of that course. Nor would I now vote to put him on the retired-list or reinstate him in the place from which he was taken by the order of suspension, but that I understand he would have been entitled, if there had been no inadvertence, to the position which he now seeks on the retired-list. I therefore, in view of all the circumstances stated, shall vote for the bill restoring him to the service and putting him on the retired-list, not because I favor these life pensions to military or civil officers, for I would repeal the whole concern if I had it in my power, and have no civil pension-list in this country; but we have that law. This man would have been entitled to the benefit of it but for the inadvertence of the Navy Department. I therefore am willing to correct that inadvertence and put the man back where he would have been but for it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] demands the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, as the Chair understands.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I shall refrain from voting.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEARST. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. EVARTS. I am assured that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], if here, would vote "yea." I therefore vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 14; as follows:

CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask leave to make a conference report on a Senate resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be received.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution to authorize the printing of additional copies of Executive Document first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the Department of State, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment numbered 4, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And that there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury the sum of $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the same, and said work shall be bound in two volumes."

And the House agree to the same."

CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
A. P. GORMAN,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
CHAS. H. GIBSON,
JNO. A. HIESTAND,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will explain the matter, as it cannot be understood by the reading. We agree to the resolution as amended by the House fixing the number of this report at 25,000 copies, with the distribution of numbers among the two Houses as heretofore stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that distribution in this particular case?

Mr. MANDERSON. Eight thousand to the Senate, 16,000 to the House, and 1,000 to the State Department. The only change is to increase the amount of the appropriation from $62,500 to $65,000. A parliamentary question arises here that I confess puzzled me somewhat. This was a concurrent resolution as it passed the Senate. It went to the House, and the House, making it self-appropriating, changed its form to a joint resolution. I suppose it will become a joint resolution by concurrence in the conference report. That I leave to the Presiding Officer. We have changed the title by the conference report so as to make it a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that the adoption of the conference report would effect a change in the form of resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move, then, that the Senate concur in the report.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 21, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 1540) to establish a port of delivery at Grand Rapids, Mich., and to put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Grand Rapids, in the State of Michigan, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a port of delivery; and that the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise conferred by the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said port.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRE-PROOF WORKSHOP, NATIONAL ARMORY, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5639) to provide for erecting a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass., one fire-proof carpenters' and stocking shop. The plan, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for said building complete the sum of $75,000.

For the purposes of this act the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to inquire whether there is a report in this case; and if so, whether it is unanimous.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Yes, sir; a unanimous report.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, Mr. Speaker, let the report be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5639) providing for the erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory at Springfield, Mass., makes the following report:

The necessity for the erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory is fully disclosed in the letter of the Secretary of War inclosing a copy of a report on the subject from the Chief of Ordnance, which letter and report are annexed to and made a part of this report.

Your committee concur in said report, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 26, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d instant, requesting that a report be made on House bill 5639, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to provide for erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass. In reply I beg to inclose a copy of a report on the subject, dated the 24th instant, from the Chief of Ordnance, who submits an estimate and drawings for a new building at the National Armory for stocking and carpenter shops, and recommends an appropriation of $75,000 for the purpose.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. SAMUEL DIBBLE,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, Washington, January 24, 1888.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War with an estimate and drawings for a new building at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass., for stocking and carpenter shops.

The old shops used for these purposes are an addition to the original machine-shop built nearly fifty years ago, and from the nature of the wood-work carried on in them are a menace to the whole structure. The erection of a fire-proof building is, therefore, not only a necessity, but is demanded by the advance made in all departments of labor since these old buildings were put up. Modern ideas require more room, more light, more conveniences for workmen, more facilities for handling material, more security for fine machinery, more economy of space in the arrangement of shops and their connection with each other. The old shops are worn out, are of the cheapest order of work buildings, and not a credit to the United States. These buildings have served their time and should be followed by workshops such as are to be found in all our manufacturing centers. This appropriation of $75,000 is therefore recommended.

The aggregate is made up as follows:

Masonry-work	$29,000
Iron-work	32,000
Wood-work	9,700
Glass and glazing	700
Paints and painting	200
Roofing	3,000
Drains and pavements	400
Total	75,000

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, if the House gives consent for the consideration of this bill I hope it will be really considered, because this question of public buildings is a very important one and is growing more so every session and every day. A few years ago four or five such bills were about all that passed through Congress at any one session. There was no general demand for them. As a rule whenever the Government had occasion for the use of buildings it was able to find satisfactory accommodations at a small rental, ranging from $150 to $400 a year; but of late the demand for public buildings seems to have become a mania. These buildings asked for now, not only in the larger cities, where the United States courts are held and internal-revenue offices or custom-houses are required, but even in places of only eight or ten thousand inhabitants. They seem to be demanded simply as a sort of adornment in order to beautify the towns and gratify the pride of the local communities and of their Representatives in Congress. And all this comes, Mr. Speaker, from the fact that we have a Treasury filled with money; that we have a surplus of a hundred millions—yea, a hundred and fifty millions; or, perhaps, I would not be far out of the way if I said two hundred millions—money that has been gathered there unnecessarily by an onerous system of taxation; money that has been wrung from the people of this country by a protective tariff, operating to contract the currency so as to depress the value of everything, to depress the wage of the laborer, to reduce the value of every article that is produced from the farm or manufactured by the handicraft of the workman. For in so far as you contract the currency there is no difference whether that is done by refusing to issue it from the mint of the Treasury or whether, after having issued it, you gather it in and pile it up in the public Treasury by an excessive system of taxation. In either case it is contraction of the currency and lays equal burdens upon the people.

Mr. Speaker, in considering bills of this character, which seem to be very numerous and which are designed to deplete the public Treasury, it would be meet for the members of this House to devote their attention for a while to the consideration of the question of reducing taxation and thus relieving the Treasury of this excessive glut, because when that shall have been done we shall hear but little of these public-building schemes.

This is a bill appropriating $75,000 for a building at Springfield, Mass., recommended, I believe, by some general of the Army, the recommendation not coming directly or specifically from the War Department.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will my friend allow me a question? Would it not be better to discuss the tariff question when the Committee on Ways and Means report their bill?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I propose to govern myself in the discussions in this House of all public questions according to my own judgment, responsible alone to my constituents who have given me a seat on this floor.

Mr. ROCKWELL. All right; go ahead.

Mr. BLAND. Now, what is the character of these bills? Several weeks ago I introduced here a bill which I had referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, upon the express statement of the chairman of the committee that that bill would be reported back, in order that the House might have some basis for action and that there might be some system with regard to this question. That bill proposed that some of the Departments of the Government—whether the Treasury Department, or the Navy Department, or the Post-Office Department——

Mr. DIBBLE. I wish to state that I have now in my hand a report on that bill, to be presented this morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I think the best thing for us to do with these public-building bills is to let them await action on that bill and that report. Let us pass a general law on this subject in preference to passing these special bills; and the only way to get a general law through is to prevent the passage of these special acts, these special favors to special individuals and special places.

Mr. KERR. Would not the gentleman be willing to allow half the time to gentlemen on this side to attack the internal-revenue system?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman can have all the time that he desires if he will oppose these public-building bills and demand the time in which to do so. I have not usurped any time here. I sat in my place and waited until the House gave unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill. The bill was about to go through without objection; and that was the time for the gentleman to rise for debate, occupying not my time, but his own.

Mr. DIBBLE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he means that if we will trade off a public-building bill for a speech on the tariff or the internal revenue the objector will permit the bill to go through if he can have that compensation? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman may intend that as a species of wit; but my reply to it is this: The tax-payers of this country to-day condemn Congress because we sit here and allow bills to go through appropriating thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars without any man raising his voice in dissent, though the bills themselves are condemned by the country.

I have stated on previous occasions that I did not propose to put myself in the position of objecting to these bills coming up, but that if the House gave consent for their consideration I would demand that they be considered and not put through nem. con., not rushed through without any consideration whatever.

I repeat that in my judgment the proper policy is to pass a general law on this subject and stop this special legislation. If other gentlemen desire the time of this Congress taken up in the discussion and passage of public-building bills, so be it. I state again that I will not allow such bills to go through without consideration and discussion.

The bill, as I have said, appropriates $75,000. Our experience in regard to public-building bills is that they generally appropriate in the commencement more than is necessary. These public buildings are usually constructed of the most costly materials that can be found. It seems to be the policy of the Department to require in the erection of these buildings stone which a fire turns into lime. If you were to construct buildings of brick in a cheap but substantial manner the cost would not be more than half what is usually called for in these cases.

Mr. Speaker, I move as an amendment to this bill to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. RANDALL. Strike out the whole amount.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says, "Strike out the whole amount."

Mr. RANDALL. And let it be ascertained how much money is really necessary for the purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the bill ought to be recommitted.

Mr. BLAND. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to await the passage of a general law on this subject.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I would like to reply to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit is not debatable.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I am aware of that.

Mr. BLAND. I will withdraw the motion for a moment, if the gentleman wishes to discuss the question.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this statement so that every member of the House may hear it: This bill is a Department bill calling for an appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory. It is not like an ordinary public-building bill for the construction of a court-house or a post-office. The building which this bill contemplates is needed for the uses of the Government in the manufacture of arms.

The difficulty about the consideration of this bill is that gentlemen upon the floor, being so busy in conversation, have not heard the report as read by the Clerk. If they had they would have seen that the bill is recommended by the Department; that plans and specifications have been filed in the committee-room; that there is great need for the erection of this building in order that the Government property may be protected from fire, and that the buildings at the National Armory were, some of them, built fifty years ago. When the war came it was supposed that it would end in a short time, and consequently temporary buildings and wings were put up, which are a source of great danger to all the other buildings upon the property.

Under the circumstances set forth in this report, this bill should be considered as an entirely distinct proposition from an ordinary post-office or court-house bill.

The remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] first made on the general subject of these appropriations, do not apply to this bill. Three years ago this bill would have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations and not to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; but the rule was changed, and now only repairs of public buildings go to the Committee on Appropriations. That is the reason why this bill was before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. At the end of this bill is an appropriating clause, and I desire to move at the proper time that it be stricken out.

There can be no object in referring this bill back again to the committee. The plans and specifications were all before it. The report shows the Government needs this building in order to carry on its own business and to protect the other buildings.

The National Armory is situated in the district I have the honor to represent. If it were in the district of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], he might have an opportunity of presenting from the Democratic Departments of the Government the needs of the National Armory. Perhaps it would make a difference, as he would then make inquiry into the needs of the Government at this public institution.

It has been suggested the amount be reduced. If anybody here has been upon the National Armory grounds at Springfield, Mass., they know we have taken buildings only fit for store-houses and fitted them up for shops. They know the buildings there are not up to the modern standard. They know that but one building has been built there since the war.

It will be idle to refer this matter back to the committee. They have everything they want now. The plans and specifications have been prepared accurately. The estimates that appear in the report were carefully prepared. The Department has recommended the bill. They say it is necessary this building should be constructed.

It is one thing to differ about appropriations for public buildings; it is another thing to say that the needs of the Government on a public reservation to carry on the public business should be ignored. I present this bill on its merits. I ask its passage on its merits. I ask for the full amount of $75,000. If you do not choose to pass it, you ignore the recommendations of your own Department.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be difficult to get the facts about these public buildings. This is a proper matter to go before the Committee on Appropriations in the legal estimates in regard to the War Department as to the needs of that Department. It is not for a new building here; it is to repair a building needed by the War Department of the Government.

Mr. ROCKWELL. That question was presented last Congress to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he said under the rule this bill must go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLAND. I insist these shall all go to the same committee. I move, therefore, this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 149.

Mr. BLAND. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER. A quorum has voted.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$50,000."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 151.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$55,000."

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BLAND. I move to take a recess for an hour.

The House divided; and there were—ayes none, noes 154.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. DUNN. Is this bill before the House by unanimous consent, and subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to objection. The Chair asked for objections, but none were made. The Chair was putting the question to the House on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time, when the gentleman from Missouri rose and addressed the House.

The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. ROCKWELL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 165.

So the motion of Mr. BLAND was not agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I desire simply an opportunity to amend this bill. I am not filibustering for any other purpose. I think $55,000 is ample, and I wanted to make that amendment to the bill, to strike out $75,000 and insert $55,000.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from South Carolina has demanded the previous question.

Mr. HATCH. I appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina to allow a vote on the proposition of my colleague to reduce the amount to $55,000, as we will save time, I am sure, by it.

Mr. DIBBLE. If the gentleman from Missouri assures the House that he moves the amendment not for the purpose of delaying proceedings, but in good faith, I will not insist.

Mr. BLAND. I am not assuring the gentleman what I am doing it for. I have the right to move the amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE. Well, I will take it for granted that the gentleman is sufficiently observant of the decorum and duties of a Representative to demand it in good faith, and I will withdraw the call for the previous question to enable him to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$55,000."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 21, noes 132.

Mr. BLAND. We had better have a quorum.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. ROCKWELL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 6, noes 157.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$60,000."

Mr. DIBBLE. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The previous question, if ordered, will include the gentleman's amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 128.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BLAND and Mr. ROCKWELL tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 11, noes 154.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, if in order at this time, I desire to make a request. The other morning I spoke to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who is not in his seat, and agreed with him that if this bill could be taken up by unanimous consent I would move to strike out the appropriating clause. I now ask unanimous consent to strike out the provision making the appropriation, all after the tenth line of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROCKWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

PRODUCTS OF CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8716) to protect free labor and the industries in which it is employed from the injurious effects of convict labor, by confining the sale of the goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured by convict labor to the State in which they are produced; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

CLASSIFICATION, COMPENSATION, ETC., OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ENLOE. I hold in my hand a petition, Mr. Speaker, which I desire to have read, in order that I may make clear the statement of the question of privilege which I wish to present.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable members of the House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners respectfully request that you use your most earnest efforts in favor of the passage of the bill H. R. 7389, introduced by Mr. BLOUNT, chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to regulate the classification, compensation, and allowances for additional rent, light, and clerk-hire of postmasters.

Mr. ENLOE. That petition was sent here in response to a circular prepared in this city and sent out by a man representing himself as an attorney charged with the duty of looking after the interest of the fourth-class postmasters before Congress. I want to say to the House that I have examined this circular and consulted those members of the House whose names are used as references in regard to it. I have had no opportunity to consult the Senators whose names are used for references in the circular, but the references as far as the members of the House are concerned are fraudulent. They inform me that there was no authority upon the part of this gentleman to use their names for such purpose; and this man has prepared a circular which is designed to defraud the fourth-class postmasters of this country of $1 each, as I understand the objects of the circular.

There are fifty-two thousand postmasters of this class, and if he can succeed in getting $1 apiece from them it will be a very handsome transaction for him.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Who is the gentleman?

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman's name is Patrick O'Farrell [laughter]; no relation, I hope, to the gentleman from Virginia. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'FERRALL. I know nothing whatever about him.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to read a short extract from this circular in order that it may go into the RECORD for the benefit of the class that I design by this statement to protect against this fraud:

Last December there was a national convention of postmasters held in this city, at which I had the honor to be present. Since then many of the postmasters have consulted me and retained my services to look after such measures as might be introduced during the present session, and, on the suggestion of friends of the measure and in the interest of postmasters throughout the country, I have prepared the petition herewith inclosed, which you should have signed by your neighbors and returned to me without delay, so that I may be able to place it, with others now in my charge, before the House at an early day. I expect to be able to place hundreds of such petitions on the desk of every Congressman and Delegate in the House of Representatives at the proper time. It is for you to do your share in the good work. You are brought daily in close contact with those who, by their votes, make Congressmen.

[Laughter.]

You fill an important and responsible office, requiring intelligent and careful service, and there is no reason why your salary should not be increased from 50 to 100 per cent. Then put your shoulder to the wheel immediately and give it a push.

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the "wheel" which this gentleman wishes to start rolling is that with which the name of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is so intimately associated, the silver dollar; for he goes on to say in the next paragraph:

With the return of the petition please inclose $1.

[Laughter.]

He is a very considerate man, though, for he adds:

If you choose to send more I won't find fault, but you should at least send $1 to cover my expense for stationery, clerk-hire, and my own time, which I am devoting to your interest. Of course if I succeed in getting the bill passed I will be paid my fee by those who retained me, but in the mean time I have to call for your mite to cover preliminary expenses. Fill out the inclosed slip and place it, with your remittance and petition, in the return envelope.

This gentleman names as references Representatives VANCE, MARTIN, FRENCH, COLLINS, MCKINLEY, and BOUTELLE, all of whom I have consulted, and have ascertained from them that they have never authorized such use of their names. He also mentions Mr. O'Neil and Mr. Campbell, but there are so many gentlemen bearing those names here that I have not been able to identify those named in this circular.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I trust the gentleman will state that the Mr. O'Neil referred to is not Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. Among those named as Senators is one "Fullerton," though there is neither Senator nor Representative of that name. Now, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that this gentleman who sends out this circular has had no connection or communication with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I presume he will not have any connection with this matter before that committee or with this measure before the House. I regard this as a transparent fraud intended to cheat the fourth-class postmasters of this country out of the small sum of $1 each, which, small as it is in each case, will make a very handsome aggregate for the enterprising gentleman who has contrived this scheme.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday when the House adjourned I had called the previous question on the adoption of the report presented by me from the Committee on Printing. I now renew the demand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the resolution which I introduced yesterday, in order to ascertain why Senate bill No. 181 had not been printed, I acted upon what I understood to be the uniform custom of the House in regard to important Senate bills. The report made by the Committee on Printing last evening, which has not yet been adopted, informed me for the first time that the printing of Senate bills is a matter for the action of the House or the Speaker, independent of any law. In the position which I took in the matter I was mistaken, and as I am the only member of the House that ever made a mistake in regard to the rules [laughter], I think I ought to say so frankly. But, Mr. Speaker, I now desire to ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the bill in question (S. 181) be printed for the use of the House.

A MEMBER. What is the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the bill known as the dependent pension bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, there is already a matter pending. Let us dispose of that, and then I shall not object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to the adoption of the report of the Committee on Printing, but I ask unanimous consent that a thousand copies of the Senate bill be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] objects. The question is on ordering the previous question on the adoption of the pending report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution as a matter of privilege.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the pending matter has precedence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must hear the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] before he can decide. Let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 1,000 copies of Senate bill 181.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is not a privileged matter. There is already one privileged matter pending before the House. After that is disposed of the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] objects to the printing of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I stated that I would not object after this other matter was disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that the pending question is privileged and that this can not interfere with it.

The previous question was ordered on the adoption of the report.

REPORT ON CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to present several privileged reports. The first of these, which is a conference report, I send to the desk and ask that it be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution to authorize the printing of additional copies of Executive Document first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the Department of State, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment numbered 4 with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury the sum of $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the same; and said work shall be bound in two volumes."

And the House agree to the same.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
CHAS. H. GIBSON,
JNO. A. HIESTAND,
Conferees on the part of the House.
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
A. P. GORMAN,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the conference report was read, as follows:

Statement of conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate resolution "to print additional copies of Executive Document 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming."

The resolution as it passed the Senate was a concurrent resolution, and provided for the printing of 7,000 additional copies of said document, 2,000 copies for the Senate, 4,000 copies for the House, and 1,000 for the Department of State.

The House of Representatives amends the resolution by providing for the printing of 25,000 copies, 8,000 of which should be for the use of the Senate and 16,000 for the use of the House, and further changed the resolution from a concurrent to a joint resolution, and made a direct appropriation of $62,500, or so much thereof as might be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the same. And further ordered that said work should be bound in two volumes.

The conferees agree to all the amendments of the House of Representatives, with an amendment providing that instead of the sum of $62,500, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, that there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"Resolved, That the Committee on War Claims have authority to have printed for the use of the committee certain statistical information now in manuscript before the committee relative to its business, the cost of said printing not to exceed $50."

The cost is not to exceed $50.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Printing have directed me to report several other resolutions, which are not privileged in their character, but which will not provoke any debate. I ask that they may be considered now, as they look to facilitating the public business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the resolutions go on the Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. To that course there is this objection: If they go to the Calendar they may never be reached. I have no interest in this matter except to promote the transaction of the public business. If objection is made to the request, I of course withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANT TO OREGON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 13th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, and submitting the draught of a proposed bill to forfeit lands granted to the State of Oregon for the construction of certain wagon-roads, and for other purposes.

The presentation of facts by the Secretary of the Interior herewith transmitted is the result of an examination made under his direction, which has developed, as it seems to me, the most unblushing frauds upon the Government, which, if remaining unchallenged, will divert several hundred thousand acres of land from the public domain and from the reach of honest settlers to those who have attempted to pervert and prostitute the beneficent designs of the Government. The Government sought by the promise of generous donations of land to promote the building of wagon-roads for public convenience and for the purpose of encouraging settlement upon the public lands. The roads have not been built, and yet an attempt is made to claim the lands under a title which depends for its validity entirely upon the construction of these roads.

The evidence which has been collected by the Secretary of the Interior, plainly establishing this attempt to defraud the Government and exclude the settlers who are willing to avail themselves of the liberal policy adopted for the settlement of the public lands, is herewith submitted to the Congress, with the recommendation that the bill which has been prepared and which is herewith transmitted may become a law, and with the earnest hope that the opportunity thus presented to demonstrate a sincere desire to preserve the public domain for settlers and to frustrate unlawful attempts to appropriate the same may not be neglected.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the majority of the Committee on Commerce upon the same bill be also printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The report of the Committee on Commerce (by Mr. RAYNER) is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred House bill 3404, respectfully report the following amendments to said bill; that is to say:

Amend the title by substituting in lieu thereof as follows: "A bill to provide for the establishment of a postal telegraph system."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the bill which is hereunto annexed.

These amendments substantially provide for a postal telegraph system, to be constructed and carried on by the Government as a part of its postal service, and the committee respectfully give the following reasons that have influenced them in adopting this measure in place of the one before them:

1. The bill does not, in the opinion of the committee, satisfy public requirements in connection with the present condition of the telegraphic business of the country. Public necessity and public convenience require some measure more practical and much stronger that the one under consideration. The fixing of maximum rates and the prohibition upon discriminations, while good enough in themselves, will not accomplish what the people of this country have now a right under existing circumstances to ask and demand of the Government in this connection. The great question that underlies the discussion of this measure is whether we are not in the hands of a monopoly that not only has the right to fix its charges arbitrarily, but can crush competition whenever it encounters it, and can centralize within itself a tremendous power that can be used to oppress the people and to promote the purposes of those who control it. To-day there is virtually but one telegraph company in this country, with hundreds of thousands of miles of line and with thousands of employés and telegraph offices.

The history of this organization has been a most phenomenal one; commencing with a small capital, it has by purchase, lease, and traffic contract submerged substantially every competing line in existence, until to-day sixty millions of people are utterly and absolutely dependent upon it for the means of telegraphic facilities, now one of the necessities of civilization. Monopoly after monopoly is gradually growing up in this country, while legislatures are sitting by with folded hands until the danger-signal will be passed and it will be too late to avoid the wreck and ruin that will be the inevitable sequel of this condition of affairs; but of all these monopolies, it is respectfully submitted that the telegraph system of this country, substantially owned and controlled by one man, is the worst and most dangerous of them all. In fact, you can look over the whole map of civilization, and in no country, monarchy or republic, will you find a parallel to this anomalous condition that confronts us.

Now it has been said time and again by the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, arguing against the necessity of governmental interference, that their system is not only the best but the cheapest in existence. As far as its being the best system is concerned, no one that has had any experience with it could truthfully assert that it could not be improved upon, both in the accuracy of transmission and the promptness of delivery. The assertion that it is the cheapest in existence the undersigned are prepared to show is incorrect. We are prepared by a comparison with European systems to satisfy Congress that, making all due allowance for distances, the average rate for telegraphing in this country is higher than it is in Great Britain and in most of the countries of continental Europe. There can be no equivocation about this, because the tables will be presented at the proper time, and the comparison will show the correctness of the statement we now make.

But be this as it may, and admitting for the sake of argument that the charges are not only reasonable but that the working of this system is efficient in the highest degree, the committee are still of the opinion that the time has arrived when it is no longer safe or expedient to intrust into the hands of one overpowering monopoly the telegraphic business of this country. It is a power that not only can be used, but has been perverted for purposes hostile to the best interests of the people.

The market of the country, its finances, and its commercial interests to so large an extent depend upon the honest and honorable administration of the management of the business of this company that the people are not in a mood to repose a trust of this character any longer without competition in the hands of a stock-jobbing corporation, whose managers, in the nature of things, have not the slightest interest for the public good, but are alone concerned in the aggrandizement of their own fortunes. A dozen telegraph companies have been born and have died an artificial death since this corporation came into existence. A number of them, it is true, started upon a dishonest basis, but all of them have been absorbed, until to-day the Western Union Telegraph Company represents an inflated capital, one-half of which would certainly be sufficient to place into full operation a system as effective in every particular as theirs. These are all matters of public notoriety, in reference to which the president and the experts of the Western Union Telegraph Company have over and over again made their statements before investigating committees of Congress. These statements are published, and from them let us now for a moment ascertain what ground they take in opposition to the Government constructing and operating a system of its own.

1. It is claimed that Congress has no power under the Constitution to pass such a measure. There is so little in this objection that it is hardly worth consideration. Every lawyer that is acquainted with the provisions of the Constitution and with the leading decisions of the Supreme Court construing it knows that this proposition has passed into history, and that Congress has the clear and undoubted right, under the grant in Article I, in section 8, to establish post-offices and post-roads, and under the power to regulate commerce between the States, and under other grants and other powers of the Constitution, to establish a telegraph system as a part of its postal service.

In fact, when the argument of the distinguished counsel of the Western Union Telegraph Company, which was made some four years ago before an investigating committee of the Senate, is examined, it will be difficult to discover any objection urged by him against the constitutionality of the measure; and it is a perfectly safe proposition to assert that the power of Congress is so plain and so clear that no one at all familiar with the provisions of the Constitution would deny the right that is vested in us to pass this legislation. Every lawyer who has argued this matter has admitted it, and no one except Dr. Norvin Green has denied it, in a memorial which he has issued and kindly sent to each Representative in Congress. He has quoted no authority to sustain the point that he makes, and it may be relied upon that if there had been anything in this objection it would have been taken, not by Dr. Green, but by some one or other of the array of distinguished counsel who have from time to time represented the interest of this company.

Now, let us glance briefly at the other reasons that are advanced by him and his company in opposition to a Government system.

1. It is contended the service will not be as well performed in the hands of the Government as it is in the hands of the present company. In answer to this it is sufficient to state that experience has taught us that whenever the Government assumes an undertaking of this sort for the benefit of the people it performs it more acceptably and more efficiently than it is possible to be done by private enterprise.

2. It is contended in the second place that the Government would not be responsible in damages for errors and delays in its service. It is very easy to provide for cases of this sort, so that the Government can be made liable for its torts as well as for its violation of contracts, and wherever in the prosecution of the telegraphic business damages arise by reason of the failure of the Government to carry out its contracts with those who use the telegraph, it is submitted that the statute now in force gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction, and that Congress would have the right under the law to refer this class of cases to the Court of Claims.

It might be well in this connection to observe that the reports of the different State tribunals will show that the Western Union Telegraph Company has availed itself of every trivial technicality and quibble of the law to evade its responsibilities for the damages that have frequently been sustained by those who have dealt with it.

3. It is insisted that the Government will engage in a losing business if this measure is adopted, which will result in increased taxation, and the experience of the Government of Great Britain is cited in support of this position.

In answer to this we desire to state that the purchase of the telegraphs by the English Government cost £10,880,571, and that this is the principal reason why the department does not receive a revenue upon its outlay. The system here will not cost the Government anything like such an amount. It will have no competitors to buy up; it will not be compelled, like the Western Union, to issue any watered stock, and it will be able to place into service a system answering all the needs of the public for a sum vastly below that which is represented by the Western Union Telegraph Company.

But let us look at this objection in another light. If the Western Union Telegraph Company can pay a dividend upon an inflated capital of over $80,000,000, how is it that the Government will not be able to pay expenses and interest upon a capital not over one-third of this amount, especially if you take into consideration the fact that the Western Union Telegraph Company has been able to pay a dividend in the face of the competition that has constantly embarrassed it, and that, according to the statement of the president of the company, made before a committee of the Senate, the Government will virtually have no opposition from the time that the system is put into operation?

From the figures that have been given the committee are of the opinion that, at the rates mentioned in this bill, the Government will be able to carry on this department in such a manner that its revenues will largely exceed its expenditures if the business of the Western Union can be taken as a basis from which inferences can be drawn and deductions made, and especially if we can take the statement of the president of the company as correct, that the result of the Government's undertaking this business will be to force competition out of the field.

This brings us to another consideration, and that is in reference to the suggestion that has been made that if the Government must adopt a telegraph system it ought, in the exercise of good faith, to acquire and purchase existing lines and properties.

Let us look at this for a moment. Is there any obligation devolving upon the Government to purchase the Western Union Telegraph Company at Wall street figures? Is there any obligation resting upon the Government, in the exercise of the highest degree of good faith, to buy out a company that has inflated and watered its stock beyond all proportion to the value of the properties that it has bankrupted and absorbed? In 1858 it commenced with a capital of about $400,000,

Then as one competing company after another arose, without the slightest regard to vested rights, it crushed them all, until to-day it holds within its embrace the franchises of the United States Telegraph Company, the American Telegraph Company, the American Union Telegraph Company, the Southern Telegraph Company, the Northwestern Telegraph Company, the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, the Mutual Union Telegraph Company, the Bankers and Merchants' Telegraph Company, the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company, besides a number of others.

In the case of the Pacific Telegraph Company, over $1,000,000 was paid for imaginary wires and lines that were never laid or built. In the case of the United States Telegraph Company, over $7,000,000 was paid for property that did not have an actual value of over one-fifth of that amount. In the case of the American Telegraph Company, eight millions of bonus in Western Union stock was paid over and above an inflated capital of $3,000,000 of the stock of that company. In the case of the American Union Telegraph Company, fifteen millions were paid in stock for franchises and property that were not worth over $3,000,000; and in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, $8,000,000 worth of stock again was issued for property that could not be properly estimated over the sum of $3,000,000.

Is it not the height of assurance to say to a great Government like this that you shall not now and shall never undertake the business of telegraphing as a branch and adjunct of the postal service unless you first step in and buy us out at the fictitious figures that we have placed upon our enterprise, although it is admitted that you can duplicate the same enterprise at a figure incomparably less than that which we are to receive?

There is only one other point that has been referred to by the president of the company in his memorial that it is proper now to take note of, and that is the following statement. Says he:

"No one person and no one family own or ever have owned anything approximating a controlling interest in the capital stock of the company, or of its bonded obligations."

Why does he not frankly come out and state that one individual virtually owns and controls the Western Union Telegraph Company, and if this should not be true, why does he not state the amount of stock that this individual does own or control, and if it be but a very small proportion thereof, why does he not relieve the public mind of the suspicion and false impression under which it has been laboring for some time that about $40,000,000 of the stock of this company is in a single hand. If this is not so, why not state it and give what is so? And until that is done we are quite sure that the public will continue to believe that the Western Union Telegraph Company, with all its immense franchises, is virtually in the grasp of one individual, who can run its stock up or down to suit his fancy; who shapes its destinies, and who has never had the slightest regard for public interests, private contracts, or vested rights, when they interfered with him in his march to aggrandizement and to power. Of all the corporations in this country it is respectfully submitted that it is the last one that ought through its officers to talk about vested rights, when it has never hesitated to destroy and annihilate them in every instance that it has met with competition or encountered opposition.

For these reasons, and for many other reasons which the committee will give at the proper time, when this measure comes before the House, we therefore hold—

1. That the time has arrived when the Government should construct and operate a postal-telegraph system as a branch of its postal service.
2. That the service will undoubtedly be self-supporting.
3. That the Government has the right to build and operate telegraph lines under the jurisdiction of its Post-Office Department.
4. That public opinion will not permit, and good faith and justice do not require, the purchase by the Government of the property and franchises of the Western Union Telegraph Company.
5. That the bill that is herewith incorporated is substantially as good a measure as can be framed for the purpose of inaugurating a telegraph system and placing it into operation as a branch of the Post-Office Department and under the jurisdiction of its Postmaster-General.

The views of the minority of the Committee on Commerce upon the bill (H. R. 3404) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate interstate commerce" are as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY ON H. R. 3404.

We find ourselves unable to agree with the majority of the committee in their views regarding H. R. 3404, and beg, therefore, to dissent therefrom.

In the bill reported by the majority of your committee we recognize the methods adopted by European peoples in dealing with the interest under consideration, and while we have no reflections to offer upon their wisdom in that regard, we can not refrain from expressing the opinion that it is of doubtful utility to import the methods of more or less centralized governments into the political system of a free people.

In our opinion the Government can not safely descend into the arena of private business. Its purpose and, as we believe, its only proper function is to discover and enforce the principles of justice. To assume that it is not able to do this except by supplying competition for every monopoly that may exist or that may be brought into existence is to announce that it ought to abdicate its prerogatives and to shirk its duty. The Government does not owe to the citizen cheap telegraph or cheap telephone or any other cheap service; but the Government does owe to him protection against extortion, protection against unjust and exorbitant charges for services that these common carriers or transmitters of intelligence may be called upon to render. As common carriers they are compelled under the law of the land to render the services demanded by the citizen, not at their own pleasure, but at his pleasure. For this service they are entitled to receive just and reasonable compensation, not whatever they may see fit to charge, but what is just and reasonable.

The sum of the evils complained of does not exist so much in the law which defines the reciprocal duties and obligations of the common carrier and citizen as in the instrumentalities that enforce such laws; in other words, not so much in the rule of justice as in the difficulty of applying the rule.

Convinced of this, the minority of your committee submit the following substitute, which aims to protect the citizen, first, against excessive and unjust charges for services received; secondly, against discrimination as to the facilities furnished; thirdly, against discriminations as to the charges made for such facilities; so that if the act proves effective it will place the citizen on an equality with the common carrier.

To accomplish this result the bill declares a violation of certain of its provisions a crime, and provides penalties such as in our opinion will enforce obedience. In addition to this it submits the entire business transactions between telegraph companies and the citizen to publicity, and confers authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission not only to enforce this publicity, but also to investigate any alleged violation of any of the provisions of the act; and it gives to the result of such investigation the dignity of a prima facie case in any legal proceeding hereafter instituted. It also arms the commission for the performance of this duty with the powers of the judiciary, and finally places at its disposal, in any compulsory proceeding that may be instituted, the services of the law officers of the Government, providing, among other things, that in all civil cases where the plaintiff recovers he shall have judgment covering his reasonable attorney's fees in that behalf expended.

For the reasons before assigned we believe that the passage of the substitute here reported will more effectually secure the rights of the citizens than the bill presented by the committee.

MARTIN L. CLARDY.
CHARLES F. CRISP.

A bill to regulate commerce carried on by telegraph.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the term "telegraph company," as used in this act, shall include any person or persons, or corporation or corporations engaged in the business of transmitting, for hire, by telegraph, messages from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or to the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to any foreign country, or from any place in the United States, through a foreign country, to any other place in the United States; but shall not include, nor shall the provisions of this act apply to, such transmission of messages from a point in a State to another point in the same State, over wires entirely within such State.

SEC. 2. That all charges made for such telegraph service, in the receiving, transmission, and delivery of messages, shall be reasonable and just, and every unreasonable charge for any such service is prohibited, and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any telegraph company, subject to the provisions of this act, to give any unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality or class of business, in any respect whatever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, locality, or class of business to any unreasonable discrimination or disadvantage, in any respect whatsoever, or to charge any more for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction. Every such telegraph company shall afford reasonably equal facilities for the receiving, forwarding, transmitting, and delivering of messages to and from their several lines, and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines. All dispatches shall be transmitted in the order of time in which received at the respective offices, and shall be sent for delivery from the office of delivery in the order of time in which received at such office, except that messages to and from officers of the Government of the United States, and of the several States, on official business, and the messages of train dispatchers on telegraph lines used by railroads, which may, when necessary, be allowed precedence over other messages.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any such telegraph company to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any competing telegraph company or companies to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such companies upon their respective lines, or any portions thereof.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any such telegraph company, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device or contrivance, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons, corporation or corporations, a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transmission of messages, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons, corporation or corporations, for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service; but nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any such telegraph company from receiving, transmitting, and delivering messages for the press, intended for publication as news, at lower rates than are at the same time charged for social, business, and other messages, but that they shall not discriminate between the publishers of newspapers by allowing terms or advantages to one or more newspapers which are not allowed to other newspapers in any city, town, or place where there is, or may be, a telegraph office from which such messages may be dropped: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit any such telegraph company from charging for night less than for day messages.

SEC. 6. That every such telegraph company shall publish its rates to such extent and in such manner as shall be prescribed from time to time by the commission hereinafter named, and shall file with said commission an accurate schedule, verified by the president or secretary, showing its rate of charges for the transmission and delivery of messages, subject to the provisions of this act, and shall, ten days before the taking effect thereof, notify the said commission of proposed changes in said schedules of rates, giving to said commission the reason for such changes. If any such telegraph company shall neglect or refuse to file its schedule of rates with the said commission, or to give notice of changes therein as aforesaid, or to publish its schedules of rates as required by said commission, such telegraph company shall, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein the principal office of such telegraph company is situated, or wherein such offense may be committed, and if such telegraph company be a foreign corporation in the judicial circuit wherein such telegraph company accepts and transmits messages, and has agents and operators to perform such service, to compel compliance with the provisions of this section, and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of said commission, or a person to be designated by it, and failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt.

SEC. 7. That in case any telegraph company, subject to the provisions of this act, shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, such telegraph company shall be liable, to the person or persons injured thereby, for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fees, to be fixed by the court, in every case of recovery, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

SEC. 8. That any person or persons, company, corporation, or corporations, claiming to be damaged by any such telegraph company as aforesaid, may either make complaint to the commission, as hereinafter provided, or may bring suit, in his, its, or their behalf, for the recovery of damages, for which such telegraph company may be liable under the provisions of this act, in any district or circuit court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; that such person or persons, corporation or corporations, shall not have the right to pursue both of said remedies, but must in each case elect which one of the two modes herein provided for it or they will adopt it. In any such action brought for the recovery of damages, the court before which the same may be pending may compel any director, officer, receiver, trustee, or agent of such telegraph company, defendant in such suit, to attend, appear, and testify in such case, and may compel the production of books and papers of such telegraph company, party to any such suit; the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in any criminal proceedings: Provided, however, That no such witness shall be compelled to produce or testify to the contents of any telegram received or transmitted by such company unless the same shall have been sent by or to the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such action.

SEC. 9. That any such telegraph company, subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such telegraph company is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense.

SEC. 10. That the Interstate Commerce Commission, created by an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, shall have jurisdiction over telegraph companies and the business transacted thereby, subject to the provisions of this act, and shall be charged with the duty of enforcing the provisions hereof.

SEC. 11. That the said commission shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of such telegraph companies, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such companies full and complete information necessary to enable the commission to perform the duties by this act imposed upon it; and for the purposes thereof the commission shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section, except that no such telegraph company or witness shall be bound to disclose the contents of any telegraph message received and transmitted by it for hire from and to any person not parties to some proceeding under investigation by such commission; and such commission shall have the same jurisdiction and power over telegraph companies, in so far as may be necessary to the execution of this act, as it has over common carriers by virtue of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887. And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction in which such inquiry is prosecuted may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna lawfully issued to any such company or to any person, issue an order requiring such company or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers, if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 12. That any person, firm, association, corporation, or any mercantile, agricultural, manufacturing, or other society, or any body politic or municipal organization, complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any such telegraph company in contravention of the provisions of this act, may apply to said commission, by petition, which shall briefly state the facts; whereupon a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded by the commission to such company, which shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint, or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission. If any such company, within the time specified, shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, such company shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of the law thus complained of. If such company shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matters complained of, in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper. Whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereof, which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendations as to what reparation, if any, should be made by such telegraph company to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found. All reports of investigations made by the commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any telegraph company that may have been complained of.

SEC. 13. That in any case in which an investigation shall be made by said commission it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the commission, either by the testimony of witnesses or other evidence, that anything has been done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of this act, by any such telegraph company, or that any injury or damage has been sustained by the party or parties complaining, or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, it shall be the duty of the commission to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such telegraph company, together with a notice to said company to cease and desist from such violation, or to make reparation for the injury so found to have been done, or both, within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission; and if, within the time specified, it shall be made to appear to the commission that such company has ceased from such violation of law, and has made reparation for the injury found to have been done, in compliance with the report and notice of the commission, or to the satisfaction of the party complaining, a statement to that effect shall be entered of record by the commission, and the said company shall thereupon be relieved from further liability or penalty for such particular violation of law.

SEC. 14. That whenever any telegraph company, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply, in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the telegraph company complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter, on such short notice to the telegraph company complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice may be served on such telegraph company, its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter as speedily as a court of equity, and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such telegraph company from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such courts to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such telegraph company, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such telegraph company or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money, not exceeding for each company or person in default the sum of $500 for every day after a day to be named in the order that such company or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

SEC. 15. That the commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing in which he has any pecuniary interest. Said commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before said commission and be heard, in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of either party interested. Said commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Either of the members of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations.

SEC. 16. That the commission is hereby authorized to require annual reports from all telegraph companies subject to the provisions of this act, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such companies specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the companies' property, franchises, and equipment; the number of employés and the salaries paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss; and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the company each year, including an annual balance-sheet. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations concerning recovery, transmission and delivery messages, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other telegraph companies as the commission may require; and the said commission may, within its discretion, for the purpose of enabling it the better to carry out the purposes of this act, prescribe (if in the opinion of the commission it is practicable to prescribe such uniformity and methods of keeping accounts) a period of time within which all telegraph companies subject to the provisions of this act shall have, as near as may be, a uniform system of accounts, and the manner in which such accounts shall be kept.

SEC. 17. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports issued from the Interior Department. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce or carried on by telegraph, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 18. That this act shall take effect and be in force from the 1st day of September, A. D. 1888.

VIEWS OF THOMAS WILSON.

In my opinion the ownership of nearly all the lines of telegraph in the country by one corporation should not be tolerated without such governmental supervision and control as will secure efficient service at reasonable rates, without discrimination in favor of or against any person or class of persons or places. And if it were made to appear to me that nothing short of Government ownership can secure these en s, then I would favor such ownership. But your committee has had no evidence presented to it which justifies the belief that Government ownership would secure to the people either better or cheaper services than may be had by private ownership under efficient governmental supervision.

On the contrary, after a somewhat careful consideration of the subject, I am led to the conclusion that the expense of the service would in all probability be greatly increased. But the consideration which, as much as any other, has influenced me to come to the conclusion at which I have arrived is the impolicy and danger of an unnecessary expansion of the patronage and power of the Government. Such expansion is generally dangerous, and, unless necessary to guard the rights of the people, opposed to the principles that lie at the foundation of good government. I believe that what can be as well done by private enterprise should not be undertaken by the Government. I therefore favor the substitute recommended by the minority of the committee, which I believe, if passed, will more effectually secure the rights of the citizens than the bill presented by the majority of the committee.

THOMAS WILSON,
Member of Committee on Commerce.

The undersigned agrees with the minority in recommending the passage of the substitute bill proposed by them. He does not feel called upon, however, to express an opinion respecting the merits of the bill reported by the majority. The subject embraced in that bill was not referred to the committee in any form or manner by the House, and in the opinion of the undersigned it was not the duty of the committee nor within its province to take any action thereon.

So the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have my name recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall when his name was called?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No, sir; not at the moment. I had been called out just prior to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair under the rule can not entertain the request.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Just as I expected.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following were announced as being paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. LAIDLAW.
Mr. BURNES with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. HALL with Mr. WILBER.
Mr. HEARD with Mr. COGSWELL.
Mr. HOWARD with Mr. MAFFETT.

Mr. MCCREARY with Mr. SHERMAN.
Mr. LAGAN with Mr. STEPHENSON.
Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GUENTHER.
Mr. PHELAN with Mr. BUTLER.
Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

The following were announced as being paired on all political questions for this day:

Mr. BARNES with Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. YODER with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.
Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. HOGG with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, with Mr. CHEADLE.
Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. BOWDEN.
Mr. CARUTH with Mr. BOUTELLE.
Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. THOMPSON, of California, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Operating under the previous question, the resolution before the House now is the one fixing days for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Labor, with a limitation as to the time to be consumed in debate.

Now, the question I submit, and on which I would like to have a decision, is this: Is that motion, under the operation of the previous question, divisible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled the other day, in response to a question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], that the latter part of the resolution, which limited the time for debate, could be voted upon separately, as it was a distinct proposition.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Would it be in order for me to state in behalf of the Committee on Labor——

Mr. ROGERS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am asking a question, for information, of the Chair—a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Would it be in order for me to state, on behalf of the Committee on Labor, that they will not ask for the adoption of the latter half of the resolution, in regard to the limitation of time, and thereby remove the pretext these gentlemen have adopted for filibustering on this resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If so, I am willing to make that statement.

Mr. ROGERS. I call this gentleman from St. Louis to order, and I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Missouri has no right to impugn the motives of any gentlemen upon the floor of this House by charging that they are doing anything for a mere pretext. And, by way of response to that, I have just this to say: In the first place the charge is not true. In the second place, I have this further to say, that we are now here asked by this Committee on Labor, with four bills on the Calendar exclusive of this resolution—asking for the privilege of four days.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is accomplishing his purpose just as well in this way as in another; and for his information, if he wants information, I will state that there are seven bills on the Calendar. But I believe debate is not in order. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to know whether it is in order for the gentleman from Missouri to charge that our objection to this mode of conducting the public business is a pretext?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to rise to a parliamentary inquiry and recognized him for that purpose. The gentleman went somewhat beyond that to make the statement he did; but it was made, and the Chair could not avoid it.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I am on the floor on a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Regular order.

Mr. ROGERS. I think I have the right to be heard on that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so; but the point of order the gentleman from Missouri makes is that the gentleman is proceeding to discuss the resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I am not discussing the bill or resolution pending in any degree.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This does not come out of the hour, does it?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, that will not do. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. This, as well as the time occupied by the gentleman from Missouri himself, comes out of the hour.

The gentleman from Arkansas will state his question of privilege.

Mr. ROGERS. When we have order I will be glad to proceed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken, but so far from my engaging in a pretext here, I am endeavoring to do the country a public service. I am acting in perfect honesty, in perfect good faith, and, as I know, am influenced by a desire for the public good.

My motives for that having been questioned, I desire to state what my reasons are by way of responding to the remarks of the gentleman impugning my motives. We are here without a solitary general appropriation bill but one on the Calendar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a question of order. I protest against this being taken out of the hour assigned to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the gentleman from Arkansas, in responding to any remarks which may have been made questioning his motives, has a right to discuss the merits of the resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I am not going to discuss the merits of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It has always been difficult for the Chair in such cases to draw the line so as to distinguish between what belongs properly to a question of personal privilege and what constitutes a discussion of the merits of a pending question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of order. Until I am taken off the floor I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Does the Chair rule that this comes out of the time of the Committee on Labor?

The SPEAKER. The time is proceeding, and only one hour is allowed under the rules of the House. The Chair rules that the gentleman from Arkansas has a right to respond to that part of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri which questioned his motives, but that he is not entitled to go beyond that.

Mr. ROGERS. It has been charged that the obstructions I have placed in the way of the passage of the resolution are a mere "pretext;" that the question touching the division of the resolution is a mere "pretext." It is to that charge I am responding, and I am responding in good faith.

I appeal to any gentlemen on this floor whether they have ever, here or elsewhere, found me acting under cover. I do not fight in that way. I have the courage to go on record on any proposition. I want now to go on with my remarks on this point.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I yield to nobody. I will state what the reasons are why I am offering these obstructions. First, only one general appropriation bill is here. I find no fault with anybody for that. We all know the Committee on Ways and Means are maturing an important piece of legislation which has to be discussed, one which affects a hundred-fold more the interests of honest labor in this country than every conceivable proposition over which that Committee on Labor has jurisdiction.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, every important committee of this House has its important legislation to be disposed of. But here is a committee which came into this House the other day with only four bills, exclusive of this resolution on the Calendar, and asks at this stage of the proceedings to have four days exclusive of the morning hours set apart for them to call up such measures as they may designate.

Mr. MASON. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman is not speaking to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Chair to dictate what gentlemen shall say in making personal explanations or when they rise to state a question of privilege. But the Chair has ruled that the gentleman from Arkansas has a right simply to respond to that portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri which questioned his motives. How the gentleman from Arkansas will do that the Chair can not determine in advance, except to say that the Chair does not think it is in order to discuss the merits of the resolution itself. The Chair does not think the gentleman can enter at large into a discussion of the merits of the resolution, because that would necessarily open the question to debate on both sides, notwithstanding the fact that the previous question has been ordered upon it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I make the point that so long as the gentleman from Missouri did not mention the name of the gentleman from Arkansas, that gentleman has not the right to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the gentleman from Arkansas assumed that the gentleman from Missouri referred to him.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, you are entirely right in that proposition. And I made these motions and assume the responsibility of them in all their breadth, and as dilatory motions. And I did so in order to prevent the wasteful expenditure of time which ought to be devoted to the most important public business that can address itself to this House. They are motions which I conceive to be valuable to the House by enabling it to deal with questions that will come up for consideration of infinitely more importance than anything these gentlemen can present.

So far from being guilty of any pretext I fight without placing myself under any cover, for the public good, against the wasteful expenditure of public time and against the arrogance on the part of this committee in coming here and asking us to assign for the consideration of four little trifling bills four days of the time of this House, when all the other important business of the country has not yet been considered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I claim the floor on a question of privilege. I want to inform this House that there are now reported and on the Calendar, a bill creating a department of labor; two bills providing for the protection of the honest labor of this country against convict labor; two bills to protect the citizens of this country against alien labor; a bill to protect the civilians of this country in certain places against the competition of enlisted men; a bill to extend the scope of the eight-hour law so as to embrace the letter-carriers throughout the United States, and a bill to send to the Court of Claims the claims of fourteen thousand men in this country for money owing to them by the Government. Are those seven bills small and unimportant? I tell these gentlemen, you have talked out this morning hour; you have accomplished your purpose, and you have simply been the tool—the tool—that has been used for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I demand that the language of the gentleman be taken down.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I say.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] rises to a question of order.

Mr. ROGERS. And I ask to have the gentleman's language taken down.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Take it down! Is it in order for me to proceed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman must take his seat until the words which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] asks to have taken down can be reduced to writing, and the question of order disposed of by the House.

The words in question having been transcribed from the notes of the Official Reporter—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] taken down upon the demand of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Are those seven bills small and unimportant? I tell these gentlemen, you have talked out this morning hour; you have accomplished your purpose, and you have simply been the tool—the tool—that has been used for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule of the House in relation to this subject to be read. The Clerk will read clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XIV.

4. If any member in speaking, or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure, or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or business has intervened.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. It will be observed that under this rule it is for the House to decide whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has violated the rules of the House or not, and whether he may proceed or not, and under the rule this must be done without debate.

Mr. COX. I rose simply to make a motion under the rule. Is it in order to move that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] be allowed to proceed in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. COX. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] moves that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] be allowed to proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] will now proceed in order

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned a moment's digression, the duties of the Committee on Labor are not only arduous, involving the time and constant attention of members, but the members of that committee are placed in a peculiar position not only towards the House but towards the country, every measure they present being subjected to the closest scrutiny, every bill they report rendering them liable to the charge of being demagogues, or of pandering to the labor element. Mr. Speaker, we have worked honestly, earnestly, and faithfully, endeavoring to compass such measures as we thought would be a benefit to the laboring classes.

We have reported these measures, and I can frankly say that most of them are the productions of members of the committee. We may not have the shining abilities of those grand, brilliant stars that appear all over this House to invent labor bills and send them to our committee for our consideration and deliberation; and, Mr. Speaker, it is a very embarrassing position, one which requires almost more calmness than I have, to stand here for two days and see our efforts simply to secure time for the consideration of our bills frittered away by men who, as leaders of the House, should be the ones to respond first to the demand of workingmen for a right to be heard. [Applause.] And if in my remarks I did digress for a moment in reference to the reasons why men did certain things, it was because on Saturday last I heard this man and that man on this side of the House suggesting to certain members that they ought to make this motion and that motion, not being willing to stand up in their seats and shoulder the responsibility themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I can simply say that in season and out of season, whenever and wherever an opportunity occurs for me to bring before this House the proposition of giving that committee proper time for the consideration of its measures, I will do it. [Cries of "Good!" "Good!"] Now, Mr. Speaker, I am through.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the House is the keeper of its own order and dignity, and its own umpire of all questions of parliamentary decorum. I shall not emulate the gentleman from Missouri. I have too much respect for the House; and if I had none for the House, I have for myself. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Missouri charges that I am the "tool" of anybody, he charges, I repeat, that which is absolutely untrue, The Speaker knows, as the House knows, and as the RECORD shows on its face, that the other day, early in the debate, I made the inquiry on my own responsibility as to whether it was proposed to discuss under the fifteen-minute rule a proposition to establish a department of the Government. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have gone to these gentlemen and asked them over and over (and it has not been consented to) to strike out that provision of this resolution, upon the promise that if that were withdrawn I would not undertake to consume any more time. I have done so this morning. I made that offer to the gentleman from New York, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY]; I have made the offer repeatedly on a former day as on this day.

Mr. TARSNEY. That has been offered to you inside of the last twenty minutes on this floor.

Mr. ROGERS. That is not the fact; the gentleman from Michigan in making that statement does not know what the fact is.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We still have time to adopt the resolution; there is no trouble about that; we have twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a precedent here that I want to talk about for a moment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he passes from this point?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is true that such a proposition as the gentleman has just referred to was intended to be offered. If it has not been offered, I will now reveal no committee secret, but will state my conviction as a member of this House that the committee will not insist upon the limitation of time.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am personally concerned, if that clause of the resolution can be struck out by unanimous consent, I have no sort of objection to letting this resolution go through. I make that statement now.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

Mr. ROGERS. But first I want to put myself right on the record; I will yield before the termination of the hour arrives. In response to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY], who stated a moment ago that this offer had been tendered, I wish to say he was simply mistaken. It was in the attitude of being tendered when the gentleman from Missouri impugned my motives; and following that came the question of privilege, so that the proposition has never been tendered until now, when it comes from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN]. My friend from New York [Mr. COX], my friend from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY], and other gentlemen, will bear witness that on the other day, as on this day, I have offered to withdraw my opposition if these propositions coming from the Committee on Labor could have reasonable time for debate.

And now, Mr. Speaker, as evidence of my good faith in this matter, I say that if the proposition just indicated is tendered, I shall not offer any further obstruction at this time; if not, then I shall insist on the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now call up for consideration the resolution—the first portion of it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is already under consideration. The question is on agreeing to the substitute for the original resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I insist that the resolution be divided, and that the first proposition be voted on separately——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is right.

Mr. ROGERS. With the distinct understanding that the second proposition shall not be voted on at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is all right; we agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is now simply upon agreeing to the amendment in the form of a substitute. When the question comes up upon the adoption of the resolution as amended a separate vote can be demanded, or a separate vote can now be had by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Agreed!"] If there be no objection, that part of the proposed substitute which relates to the time to be allowed for debate will be stricken out. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Then the question is on agreeing to the substitute with that part omitted.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Under the order of the House, I call up for present consideration——

The SPEAKER. This resolution cuts off the remainder of this hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is whether the unfinished business before the House, the bill in regard to homesteads, comes up in its regular order after this business has been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Its consideration is postponed by this order and can be resumed on any day not dedicated to this business.

PROTECTION OF WAGES.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to withdraw any remarks made by me of an offensive and personal character. I do not desire to bear animosity. I am willing to forgive everybody. [Laughter.]

I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3405) to protect mechanics, laborers, and servants in their wages.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for all personal services rendered by any person acting in the capacity of mechanic, laborer, or servant in the District of Columbia and Territories of the United States, to an amount not exceeding $100, no property shall be exempt from seizure and sale under execution: Provided, That in order to secure the benefits of this act such mechanic, laborer, or servant shall commence their action within six months next after the last service shall have been rendered.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. A bill similar to this in every respect passed the last House of Representatives by unanimous consent, but failed to be reported in the Senate. The intention of this bill is to protect that class of persons who are compelled to trust their labor before demand for payment. Servants, laborers, and mechanics must first render service before they can demand their pay; and this is to prevent a party employing a servant or laborer and after using them refuse to pay them, under the exemption law. It is provided that "no property shall be exempt from seizure and sale under execution," which will have the effect to protect their wages. I do not desire to take up time unnecessarily. It only applies to the District of Columbia and the Territories.

I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIMITATION OF HOURS OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1645) to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter eight consecutive hours shall constitute a day's work for letter-carriers in cities or postal districts connected therewith, for which they shall receive the same pay as is now paid as for a day's work of a greater number of hours. If any letter-carrier is employed a greater number of hours per day than eight, he shall be paid extra for the same in proportion to the salary now fixed by law.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The committee recommend in the third line to amend by striking out the word "consecutive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1539) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics, arising under the eight-hour law.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I take it that this bill is in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANNON. It ought to be considered there.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House.

Mr. CANNON. I think this is so important a measure that there should be a full discussion in the usual way in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. I will make my request for unanimous consent, then, that we have the same privilege as in Committee of the Whole, with five minutes for debate on amendments, etc. That arrangement leaves the Speaker in the chair, and facilitates, in my opinion, the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think it will save a great deal of time to let this go into committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. TARSNEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill which has just been read in the House.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to omit the first formal reading of the bill, and let it be read by sections for debate and amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the bill has already been read in the House.

Mr. COX. Then I ask that it be read by sections for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] in charge of the bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill, reported by the Committee on Labor, is one which affects a large number of persons who are now, and have been for some years past, in the employment of the Government of the United States. It will be remembered, sir, that in the year 1868 Congress passed a law known as the "eight-hour law," which reads upon the statute-books as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed or who may be hereafter employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

This will be found in the Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 77.

Time passed and this law was disregarded in many instances. Complaints came from the employés of the Government to the departmental officers and to the President of the United States, and finally, in 1869, President Grant issued a proclamation as follows, in relation to this law, in view of the fact that the law previous to that time had been disregarded:

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, and repealed all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith:

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby direct that from and after this date no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such workmen, laborers, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 19th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1869, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-third.

U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

Following, Mr. Chairman, in 1872, with a still continued disregard for the law in this particular, further proceedings were had by Congress in relation to the matter by which they allowed an extra compensation for the difference between the time when the act was passed, in 1868, and the date of the proclamation of President Grant, in 1869. That period, however, covered only a period of about ten and a half months. Therefore, Congress recognized the construction to be placed upon the law as well as the President of the United States. That law of 1872 was in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers be, and are hereby, authorized and required, in the settlement of all accounts for the services of workmen, laborers, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. (See Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 134.)

Such, then, was the early construction and treatment of these acts. Subsequently, however, a change came over the spirit of the dreams of those in charge of the management of the affairs of the Government, and we find that in 1877, when Mr. Thompson was Secretary of the Navy, the following order was issued by him:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 30, 1877.

The following decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is published for the information of the Navy:

Under this construction of the law regulating public labor, given by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Department has fixed the rate of labor for mechanics, foremen, leading-men, and laborers on the basis of ten hours a day. All workmen electing to labor only eight hours per day will receive a proportionate reduction of their wages.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Thus requiring the superintendents of the different navy-yards to employ the men on the basis of ten hours per day, and if they chose to work for two hours less their pay was to be accordingly reduced.

Again, on March 21, 1878, the then Secretary of the Navy, the same as before, Thompson, issued the following circular order:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 21, 1878.

The following is hereby substituted, to take effect from this date, for the circular of October 25, 1877, in relation to the working hours at the several navy-yards and shore stations:

The working hours will be: From March 21 to September 21, from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m.; from September 22 to March 20, from 7.40 a. m. to 4.30 p. m., with the usual intermission of one hour for dinner.

The Department will contract for the labor of mechanics, foremen, leading-men, and laborers on the basis of eight hours a day. All workmen electing to labor ten hours a day will receive a proportionate increase of their wages.

The commandants will notify the men employed, or to be employed, of these conditions, and they are at liberty to continue or accept employment under them or not.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

A cool proposition for the Secretary of the Navy to make in the face of existing law upon the subject.

Under this provision, if men worked ten hours a day they received a proportionate price. When the law declared eight hours to be a day of labor, and they worked for but eight hours, they were cut down from ten to eight and received but a proportionate compensation, when the clear intention of the act was to fix the day at eight hours and pay compensation for a day's work for that number of hours.

So it has been since the change in that policy. These people have been deprived of the benefits, whatever they were, intended to be given them by the original act of 1868 by Department construction and the rulings of subordinate officers.

Mr. COX. And of the President himself.

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, and of the President himself. This same matter has been presented to the present President of the United States, and an inquiry has been propounded to him as to whether that law in any of the Departments of the Government to his knowledge was being violated. He answered as follows:

I believe that the law is a sound one and a good one, and that it should be enforced to the letter. I have no information regarding instances of its violation or evasion, but if such instances are presented to me I will see that the abuse is remedied and the full spirit of the law is enforced, which I understand to be to pay workmen in the Government employ for eight hours' work, daily, what is paid outside of the Government employ for a full day's work. The Government can not afford to set the example of non-enforcement and non-observance of its own enactments.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take much of the time of the committee in the presentation of this matter. But I repeat what I have already said—that men, under the construction of this law, have been deprived of the benefits intended to be conferred upon them by it. And now what do they ask? They do not come to Congress and ask that Congress shall fix and determine the number of hours that they have lost. They do not come here and ask that this House shall place a legal construction upon that act or their rights under it. But they come here as suitors go to courts and they simply ask this House for permission to go to a tribunal organized under the Constitution and the laws of the country, that they may there present their claims and be heard, and that the court shall determine whether the Government of the United States is responsible to them for this loss of hours and loss of pay, and if it is found that they have a rightful claim then that the judgment of the court should be so recorded. When that judgment comes before Congress then it will be for Congress to make appropriations to pay the judgments so rendered against the Government.

That is the full extent to which this bill goes as I understand it, and I have given it very careful and attentive attention during the months of this winter.

I will not further occupy the attention of the House except to say that I believe the Government of the United States can not afford to close the doors of its courts to even the humblest of its citizens who are seeking redress. They believe, whether rightly or not, that the Government is their debtor. They do not ask you to decide that question, but they ask you to point out to them the pathway and permit them to enter into the proper forum and to present to the proper tribunal the fair question whether under that law they are entitled to compensation or whether they are not. If they are not, then they will do as we all do when the court decides against us, bow our head in meek submission to its order and leave; but if they are right, then the Government of the United States should pay them.

I believe from the observations I have made during the brief time I have been a member of this House that if a private individual were to attempt to conduct his business in the same way and on the same plan as some of the Government business here is conducted he would be in bankruptcy inside of nine months for want of credit. The Government can not afford to break its promise once made, whether it was a wise promise or not. And when you made it to these employés as far back as 1868, that promise is as sacred to-day as it was on the day when it was enrolled on that desk.

I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will take favorable action upon this bill and report it favorably to the House that it may be speedily put upon its passage, and that these men who are affected by it may obtain that relief to which I believe they are justly entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. I have not had the pleasure of reading the report, and it is for information I ask, how long was it before this eight-hour law was enforced after it was passed?

Mr. TARSNEY. The trouble was it was not enforced at all until President Grant in 1869 compelled its enforcement by proclamation.

Mr. BLAND. A year after the passage of the law.

Mr. TARSNEY. Ten and a half months.

Mr. BLAND. Does the bill relate only to the time intervening between the passage of the act and the proclamation?

Mr. TARSNEY. No, sir. The act passed in 1872, I think, related only to the intervening time, and provided for compensation between the time of the passage of the act and the time of issuing the proclamation. This bill goes back to the time of that act of 1872, and takes in everything since up to to-day, if you please.

Mr. BLAND. That is the question. Now, what has been the history of that act since that time? Has it been enforced or not?

Mr. TARSNEY. In some instances it has not been enforced; in some instances it has. If the gentleman was listening, I called his attention to the orders and circulars which were sent out by Secretary

Thompson in 1877 and 1878 from the Navy Department, by which orders he practically nullified the law in that Department, and declared that ten hour a day and not eight hours should constitute a legal day's labor.

Mr. BLAND. How many laborers or how much money would be covered by the claims arising under that order or circular?

Mr. TARSNEY. The best information obtainable upon that subject is in the report made by the Secretary of the Navy to the House in the Forty-eighth Congress, I believe, and he estimated that the amount would be about $3,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. That is, from the time Secretary Thompson issued his circular up to what date?

Mr. TARSNEY. No, not from that time, but under the whole law.

Mr. BLAND. Was there any other Department besides the Navy Department in which that course was pursued?

Mr. TARSNEY. This bill relates to all the employés of the Government in or out of the Navy.

Mr. BLAND. That I understand; but what I was trying to get at was whether the Navy Department was the only one in which the course you have mentioned was pursued, or was a like course pursued in all the Departments.

Mr. TARSNEY. Not in all the Departments. I understand that in some of the administrative departments of the Government the eight-hour rule has been adhered to, while in others it has not.

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this bill would apply also to clerks and employés in the various Departments in Washington where they have been held over eight hours, sometimes ten or twelve hours a day?

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, my answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania is this: A proper answer to his question would require a construction of the various terms employed in the act of 1868; and whether the class of employés referred to by him would properly come under the designation of the words "laborer," "workman," or "mechanic" is a question of the construction that is to be placed upon the law. I am not clear in my own mind as to whether they would or would not.

Mr. BRUMM. Would the committee object to inserting the words "or other employés?"

Mr. TARSNEY. I think the committee ought not to do that now.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the purpose of this bill, it is simply to provide for compensating employés, or rather laborers, workmen, and mechanics—using the language of the act of 1868—and it does not go beyond that.

Mr. TARSNEY. That is correct. It applies to the cases arising under the act of 1868, and nothing beyond that.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask my friend from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] whether this bill (H. R. 1539) introduced by Mr. LONG is the bill under consideration at the present time?

Mr. TARSNEY. It is.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question based on the first section of the bill, which I will read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever as a laborer, workman, or mechanic has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Now, in view of that positive provision, I wish to ask the gentleman what is the necessity or propriety of sending these parties to the Court of Claims as the bill does in the next section?

Mr. BRUMM. To adjudicate their accounts and find out how much is due them.

Mr. CANNON. This is a mere matter of computation, and why should it not be left to the auditing officers of the Treasury? Why entail upon these poor men, whom all are so anxious to protect, the expense of employing attorneys to go into the Court of Claims to establish a right to recover against the Government, which right is given as broadly and fully as language can give it in the first section of the bill?

A MEMBER. New legislation.

Mr. CANNON. I trust we are not legislating for the lawyers here. I ask this question of the gentleman from Michigan in good faith. I never saw the bill until ten minutes ago.

Mr. TARSNEY. I will answer the question in good faith. It is fair to presume, Mr. Chairman, that since 1868 many thousands of men in all parts of this country have been employed in the service of the United States Government, some for short spaces of time and some for longer periods, but I take it that very few of those who were in the service at that time are in the service at present, because of the ever-changing condition of things.

I am informed—I do not now recall where the act may be—that there is some statute of limitation which prevents the presentation of a certain class of claims (and these may be among the number) after the lapse of a designated period of time. One of the effects of this bill will be to do away with any such limitation; and another will be to obtain a judicial construction upon the intent and meaning of the eight-hour law. I presume that the trial of only one case in the Court of Claims would be necessary in order to determine this question; for all other cases depending upon a like state of the facts and the law would be controlled by the leading case, which when decided would be res judicata as to the whole.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will allow me to call his attention to that provision of the bill which proposes to obviate the force of the statute of limitations. If we are to legislate on this subject at all, it appears to me that a perfect remedy would be afforded by striking out section 2, and adding to section 1 these words, "that these accounts shall be settled by the auditing officers of the Treasury Department; and the statute of limitations shall not apply to the same," although the statute does not apply if they are adjudicated in the Treasury. If the act were passed in this form, these claims would then come before Congress certified for appropriation, upon settlements made by the auditing officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TARSNEY. Why may they not as well come here upon a judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. CANNON. I will tell the gentleman. If the auditing officers of the Treasury Department make these settlements, there is not one cent of fee to be paid; the settlements will be made rapidly and inexpensively. The suspicion arises in my mind—I will not say suspicion, but suggestion; I know the gentleman from Michigan is not in harmony with any such state of affairs as I am alluding to—that many of these men during the almost twenty years that have elapsed may, perchance, have assigned their claims, which may now be in the hands of a few persons; and the original holders of claims may, under the present bill, be driven to employ lawyers to represent them in the Court of Claims, so that there would be a lien upon the judgment for the expenses of the litigation. These objections could not arise if we should provide for the auditing of these claims in the Treasury Department. I call the gentleman's attention to this suggestion, for I feel quite sure it is well founded, and deserves his consideration as well as that of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether he has read the recent report of a Senate committee in regard to the circumlocution of the Departments.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; but I will say to the gentleman that if we direct the auditing officers of the Treasury Department to settle these accounts absolutely, the matters being such as rest in computation, they can be settled very rapidly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They can be; but will they be?

Mr. CANNON. I think they will be.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman know that the practice in the Court of Claims is one of the simplest in the world? So far as regards the gentleman's suggestion that some of these claims may have been assigned, he can offer an amendment which would prevent such assignments from operating; and I, for one, would vote for it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know when those who may wish to be heard in opposition to this bill will have any time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan in charge of the bill was recognized by the Chair as entitled to one hour. He has yielded to several gentlemen, and the time so occupied comes out of the hour.

Mr. TARSNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to some features of this measure, for the bill strikes me as an exceedingly dangerous one. This is not a proposition simply to refer to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of the laboring people of this country growing out of the eight-hour law. The bill undertakes to legislate upon the validity of the claims, and to provide that eight hours' work shall be regarded as constituting a day's labor. Now, giving a man a right to go into court and sue upon a contract which has been violated is a very different thing from giving him a contract after the work has been performed, with the right to go into court and sue upon it. If the object of this legislation were simply to give this class of citizens a right to enforce a contract under which they labored and which has been violated, it would be a very simple proposition to say that any man who, at any time since 1868, has labored for the Government more than eight hours a day shall have the privilege of going into court and establishing his claim for the excess of compensation over what he received. But this bill provides—

That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work.

There must be some question as to whether the eight-hour law, as heretofore existing, gives this right to additional compensation, because this bill undertakes to declare, twenty years after the work has been performed, that in respect to such work eight hours shall constitute a day's labor.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, every "laborer, workman, or mechanic"—that is, every man who is employed about the various Departments of the Government—if he has for any reason been required to do daily more than eight hours' work, no matter whether the original eight-hour law covers his case or not, is to have the right under this bill to go into court and make claim against the Government and recover compensation for the amount of labor exceeding eight hours a day.

Now, if there has been a clerk in the Departments or a laboring man or workman who went there in expectation he would have to work nine or ten hours a day, and that was the legitimate work of his office, and he performed it and accepted pay for it, he can now come on the Government, twenty years after the work was done, and make a claim against the Government and secure its payment.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, there is a provision in the seventh line of the first section which seems to me to be very peculiar. Beginning at line 7 it says, "shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor." That is, as I understand it, if the Govrenment has not given him eight hours' labor he shall get pay for a day's work.

Mr. TARSNEY. No, it does not mean that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then what does it mean?

Mr. TARSNEY. It means just what it says, that there shall be no reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It says, "shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor." In the first part of the section it is provided that whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor. That is, if he only works six hours he gets pay for the full day's work. There is to be no reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the gentleman from South Carolina let me interrupt to say that the language is the precise language of President Grant's proclamation? and the purpose of the proclamation and of the bill alike is to meet the claims of laborers at that time, when they worked for ten hours a day, who, when labor was reduced to eight hours, were entitled to full pay, and this clause would simply give it to them. It only enforces the eight-hour law from the time of its passage.

Mr. BRUMM. The language of the section must be construed one part with the other.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Those words can be stricken out without affecting the bill. Indeed, it would be an improvement to the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will look at the fourth and fifth lines of section 2 he will see a day's work is to be paid at the price per day as provided for in the first section of this act. They are not to be paid at the price or the number of hours actually worked or under the eight-hour law as originally understood, but they are to be paid at the price provided in the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I should like to have two minutes more.

Mr. TARSNEY. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-eight minutes.

Mr. WARNER. I hope the gentleman will let me send up to be read two amendments I desire to offer.

Mr. TARSNEY. I will allow the gentleman to offer his amendments.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:

"And provided further, That all suits shall be commenced and prosecuted in the name of the laborer, workman, or mechanic, his heirs, administrator, or executor. If upon the hearing it shall appear that a claim has been assigned to any person or persons, the suit shall be dismissed."

Add to section 3:

"That it shall be unlawful for any attorney or other persons to charge or receive, either directly or indirectly, a greater fee than 10 per cent. of the amount collected in any claim or number of claims collected or prosecuted under this act. That any contract or agreement entered into in violation of this provision shall be null and void, and the attorney or the person who shall, either directly or indirectly, take, receive, or ask for a greater fee than herein provided for shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall thereafter be barred from practicing in any court in the United States or before any Department."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, the gentleman from Michigan, in his own time, yielded to the gentleman from Missouri to have these amendments read for information. They are not pending amendments, but have been merely read for the information of the committee.

Mr. TARSNEY. One word in reference to the criticisms made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] of the language of the bill in the first section.

Now, as to the suggestion made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] relative to the persons who may bring suit, I answer this: I know not how it may be in other parts of the country, but in the State from which I come, sir, it was found some years ago, on account of the hard times we had, and the difficulty of obtaining money, that people laboring in the employ of our mills and factories were at times compelled to take orders, and from time to time were obliged to discount or assign them to other people; and when they were paid, in nine cases out of ten it was to somebody who did not perform the service. But when they were paid they were paid in accordance with the original agreement. I do not know what the facts are in this case; but I would not wonder if during the panic of 1873, and that long period of depression which followed, lasting some five years, that many of these people who are now employed by this Government under its guaranty that they should be paid at the rate fixed by Congress in 1868, were obliged, in order to obtain a livelihood for their families, to discount or assign their payments. Suppose they did. Does that fact in any manner lessen the liability of the Government for the performance of the obligations it entered into to pay the claim, no matter to whom?

Mr. BLAND. Let me ask the gentleman if he proposes that this bill, if passed, is to enable these claim agents to step forward and get hold of this money? If that is to be the effect of the bill I am opposed to it.

Mr. TARSNEY. Not by any means.

Mr. WARNER. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to permit me to offer the amendments to be read for information, and the Chair to state that they were not yet pending. I shall ask consent of the House to offer them at the proper time, and try to defend the principles therein embodied, as, I think, a protection to the laboring people.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the opportunity will be offered at the proper time.

Mr. TARSNEY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COBB. Let me ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat. In his report he refers to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States without quoting it. I desire to know what it was the Supreme Court decided as to the meaning of this law.

Mr. TARSNEY. I will furnish the gentleman the reference before the debate closes.

Mr. COX. I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House that general debate be now closed and that we now proceed under the five-minute rule.

Several members objected.

Mr. CANNON. I want a little time in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield the floor?

Mr. TARSNEY. I simply desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if the gentleman from Illinois wishes to be heard in opposition to the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I want to submit some observations either in opposition to or for very material modifications of the bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois desires it, I will yield him five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I prefer to take time in my own right. Perhaps I may be able to yield the gentleman time out of my hour if he desires it.

Mr. TARSNEY. Thank you; it may be that the gentleman will get hold of the reins.

Mr. CANNON. This eight-hour legislation was had in 1868 for the purpose of trying the experiment as to the effect of eight hours' labor upon the working people of this country. It was supposed that the Government could try that experiment and could afford to try it better than anybody else. Mind you, that was twenty years ago.

There have been various agitations throughout the country about the hours of labor since that time, and there had been prior to that period. I gather from this bill, as well as from knowledge otherwise obtained, that for a portion of the time since the enactment of that law the people designated by the bill have worked for more than eight hours for the Government, and have been paid for their work. If they worked ten hours they have had pay for ten hours, and if they worked for eight hours they would have what is called eight hours' pay.

Now, I will cheerfully support any legislation that looks towards the enforcement of this law as long as it stands upon the statute-books. It is true that men and women and children, too, representing sixty millions of people throughout the country, most of whom work nine, and ten, and twelve, and some fourteen hours a day, pay the taxes which carry on the Government. Yet, in their interest, and in the interest of everybody in the present, and looking to the future, I stand ready as long as this act stands upon the statute-books to help enforce it and to restrict the employment of any one individual mentioned in the act for more than eight hours a day. Because if you permit them to work ten or twelve hours a day for the Government, then the very object for which the act was passed is destroyed and you are not trying the experiment in good faith.

But I call attention to the fact that this bill does not look towards the enforcement of the eight-hour law either in the present or in the future. It is not like the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri the other day, when we instructed the Public Printer to enforce the eight-hour law in the Government Printing Office. On the contrary, the proposition is to go back for twenty years and find every person designated in the act, who ever worked for the Government, although he received his wage and receipted for it, not expecting to get more than he received when he did the work, and give him pay for all work that he performed over eight hours a day, which would equal 20 to 25 per cent. of all the money paid by the Government for work in the last twenty years.

How much does it cost? I do not know. In the report, which I saw for the first time a half hour ago, it is stated that in the navy-yards alone, as nearly as they can get at it, it would be nearly $3,000,000. How much it is to cost everywhere throughout the country I do not know. I suspect from fifteen to twenty-five millions of dollars.

Now, I ask gentlemen how this benefits labor in the contest it is making to-day. To go back twenty years and pay the Government employé who got a larger wage, mind you, than employés at the hands of private employers anywhere in the country; and after that larger wage has been paid and receipted for, to go back, and, if this legislation is had, pay one-fourth or one-fifth more to those who worked ten hours. Is that going to give much satisfaction, I say, gentlemen, to the laborers whom you represent, in the factories throughout the country, who are working ten and some eleven hours a day? Is it going to be much satisfaction to the agricultural laborer who toils from ten to twelve hours a day? Is it going to be much satisfaction to the railroad laborer who works from ten to twelve or fourteen hours a day, to say to him that he is going to be taxed to pay these claims that are twenty years old to men who got a greater wage than he did for one-fifth to one-fourth more labor done at the same time? I think not. I do not think they will say there is much satisfaction in that. I do not believe there is a laborer whom I have the honor to represent, working on the average for his dollar and half to two dollars a day—some of them for less—and working ten or twelve hours, who will be greatly pleased when I tell him we propose to tax him to pay somebody who worked twenty years ago and got what he was entitled to, and far more than like laborers got, a bonus of twenty to twenty-five millions of dollars.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if his farmer constituents do not work from sun to sun, sometimes sixteen hours a day, and whether they should be taxed to pay these men who work eight hours a day, most of them? Are not many of the gentleman's farmer constituents pressing here to get into these positions, and glad to get them?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I desire to answer one question at a time. At certain seasons of the year farmers do work as long as the gentleman states. All of us know this, that in the navy-yards in this country and wherever the Government employs workmen it is a favor and a boon to get employment there. Why, sir, it is a part of the political patronage of the party in power. I recollect years ago, when I was a younger man sitting in the House, hearing the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who then had had considerable service, listening to him, as I always do, with great respect, when he spoke of the condition of affairs that existed in the navy-yards, namely, larger wages than were paid elsewhere and the employés very largely employed from the political standpoint. It takes influence to get these positions. It is quite a boon to the people who get them, even where they work ten hours a day.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. I do not think the gentleman would like to misinterpret an ancient speech of mine. I never made a speech of that kind—not in those words or with that meaning. I used to demand, as I have no doubt the gentleman from Illinois will do, either the enforcement of the eight-hour law or its repeal. I did so time after time, until the heart grew sick with the dilatoriness of it; and I almost quit talking about it.

I am very glad I have lived to see this day when the eight-hour law has been applied to the letter-carriers, and I hope it will be applied to all other Departments of the Government where employés of this character are employed. But I have never advocated the giving of higher wages in the navy-yards or elsewhere. I have only advocated such wages as the eight-hour law gave. And I have never advocated the right of men in the Departments to have only eight hours' work. I have only advocated the application of the law equitably to those men who have worked faithfully according to the time fixed by a law passed by the American Congress and interpreted by some of our best executive officers.

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the gentleman from New York. I state again that this eight-hour law should be enforced, and I stand ready to help enforce it as long as it stands upon the statute-book. But I want to have some regard for the reason for the enactment of this eight-hour law, and I want it to perform that function which Congress thought it would perform, namely, to lead off as a pioneer to the movement leading towards the shortening of the hours of labor in this country, and not bring in claims twenty years old and in the name of labor fasten additional burdens upon labor at large throughout the country.

Now, having said this much, I want to again call attention to the first section of the proposed act. I will ask gentlemen to read it. It is as follows:

That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Is that uncertain? Now I am going upon the proposition that the bill is to pass. Does not that entitle every man to pay for every hour's work he ever did upon the basis of a day's work for eight hours; that if he worked ten hours he gets pay for the other two? There can be no doubt about it. Hence I say again, as I said in a question I asked the gentleman from Michigan, what is the necessity of the second section? What is the necessity for sending these men to the Court of Claims to find out whether the Government owes them something and what that amount is, if it does owe them anything, when the Government in the very act proposed to be enacted says it owes them and what shall be paid?

I propose when this bill is reached for amendment under the five-minute rule to offer a substitute for section 2. If gentlemen will take their bill while I read, they will see the changes I propose. I will read the second section of the bill as I shall propose it.

That all claims for labor so performed in excess of eight hours a day are hereby referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury, to be adjudicated upon the basis that eight hours constitute a day's work, and are to be paid for at the price per day as provided for in the first section of this act; and the amounts which they find to be due each claimant shall be certified to Congress at the beginning of each session thereof for consideration; and no payment or agreement made or receipt given for a less sum per day than the full price of a day's work, as provided in the first section of this act, shall bar the right of recovery: Provided, That all claims under this act shall be filed within two years from and after its passage.

Now, I will state to gentlemen that under the new regulations of the Treasury Department these men can file their own claims; the accounting officers can take the rolls upon which the men were paid and can examine them and make these computations. For the further information of gentlemen, I will state that under the new regulations of the Department no attorney can have any lien upon any account that the Secretary of the Treasury finds to be due, and I think that is a very wise regulation. Gentlemen are familiar with it in connection with claims for bounty and back pay.

Mr. REED. Under the pending bill, as I understand it, these claimants would have to pay attorneys to appear in the Court of Claims, would they not?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. REED. And each one would have to bring his own suit?

Mr. BRUMM. Not necessarily.

Mr. REED. I ask this question because I represent some of the people who are interested and who have written me upon that very point. They think they would be liable under this bill to be taxed from 10 to 25 per cent. of the amount of their claims, an objection which the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] obviates.

Mr. CANNON. All the rolls and all the receipts and all the evidence upon which these parties have been paid by the Government are still in existence, and the accounting officers of the Treasury can have access to them. There need be no trouble in settling these accounts. It can be done exactly as back-pay and bounty accounts are settled.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reply to a remark that I understood to fall from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY]. I understood him to say that where these men in the last twenty years had assigned their claims to parties who were dealing in claims, he believed this legislation should be had in the interest of the assignees.

Mr. TARSNEY. I did not put it in that form.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that in substance. Mr. Chairman, I take issue with the gentleman. I say frankly that I doubt the propriety of this proposed legislation looking backward. I am heartily in favor of it in the present and looking to the future; but I will never go home to my constituents in Illinois and say to them that by voice or by vote here I have given this money to parties who deal in these claims. I will not do that, because at best it is of doubtful propriety, and I am not ready to tax the man that toils ten or twelve hours a day in order to pour the money into the coffers of this class of speculators.

Mr. COX. I suggest that my friend from Illinois, with his skill and experience as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and as a legislator, had better draught an amendment to prevent the sharks from getting any of this money.

Mr. CANNON. This amendment that I have drawn does that, I think. As I understand the regulations, the Secretary of the Treasury does not recognize transfers or attorneys' fees in these cases or any others, except where the claimant requests it after the appropriation is made by Congress.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman know that a number of these claims are now sleeping in the Auditor's Office simply because the officials claim that the evasion of the law by Secretary Thompson was legal?

Mr. CANNON. Then retain the first section, which says so plainly that the wayfaring man can read as he runs that these men shall have this money.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The wayfaring man might, but the Auditor might not. [Laughter.] That has been the experience heretofore.

Mr. CANNON. Some presumptions are to be made in favor of at least common sense on the part of officers of the Government, even under the present Administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. If there had been some honesty, this bill would never have been required.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking for fun this evening or because I feel like speaking, but because I have a profound conviction that this bill ought not to pass. I have listened with interest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has yielded me a portion of his time, and I desire to say now, as I have had occasion to think often before, that when you take him outside of politics and partisanship he is one of the clearest-headed and safest legislators upon this floor. And I want to say to his Illinois constituents that so long as they will go astray and elect a Republican, they can not do better than elect him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I thought the gentleman said he did not intend to speak "for fun."

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I am not speaking "for fun." This is sound sense.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], in stating his position a while ago, when he asked a question of the gentleman from Illinois, said that if the law provided that eight hours should be a day's work and these men worked daily more than eight hours, it was but equitable and right that they should be paid for the additional time.

Now, I ask the gentleman to look upon the other side of this proposition and answer me this question: If employment under the Government is sought after eagerly by the laborers of this country, if the Government pays better wages than are paid by private employers for similar grades of labor, if these men seek places under the Government with the full knowledge that they are expected to work a certain number of hours for a given amount of wages, if this contract is made with a full knowledge of the number of hours of labor which will be expected of them, if they not only seek the places, but accept them gladly, and work ten hours and receive their money under the contract they freely made, I ask the gentleman from New York whether he thinks the equities of the case demand that the laborers of this country who can not get Government employment, but who must labor for twelve or fifteen hours per day for such wages as they can get without additional or extra compensation, and have to pay by taxation the wages of the Government employés, should be taxed to give them additional pay? I pause for reply.

Mr. COX. I rise under considerable apprehension. My friend is so vigorous that it really startles me a little.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir; this is a vigorous proposition.

Mr. COX. But I will give the gentleman an answer (I do not want to make a speech), so that we can maintain our entente cordiale. He will understand my language. [Laughter.] I want to keep him good-natured, for he is the best-natured man in the House. Most of my information about this matter arises from the fact of my neighborhood to the navy-yard at Brooklyn, and the fact that a great many of my constituents living along the East River have worked as calkers, machinists, etc., at the navy-yard on the other side.

It is within my personal knowledge that these navy-yard employés gave their ten hours' work under protest, and with a distinct understanding that they would make a claim thereafter for pay for the extra time. And there are now pending in the Auditors' offices, unsettled as yet, thousands of claims of this character. I beg to say further to my friend from Mississippi that the wages of these navy-yard employés are governed by the wages in the same trade or business which obtain in the vicinity. So that it really comes to a case of equity.

Now, I will ask my friend in turn whether he would not either enforce this eight-hour law in those cases to which the law is applicable or repeal it. He would answer, "I would repeal it." He would favor its repeal to-day. But if he repealed it, would he not pay the men who have worked under it in good faith under protest, the men who have filed their claims, and who seek only to have those claims properly audited in the Department or adjudicated in the Court of Claims?

Now, I do not know whether I have answered my friend's question, because he was so intense in putting it that I was almost scared out of my wits. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. The gentleman answered the question pretty conclusively when he said that a good many of his constituents were interested in these claims. [Laughter.] That I construe to be the "milk in the cocoanut," and the true answer. I accept it as explaining the position of the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I thank the gentleman for recognizing me as a good local representative. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, since I have been here I have heard a good deal of this talk about accepting Government positions "under protest." [Laughter.] Sir, every member on this floor, I presume, understands that. [Laughter.] We all know something about the constant clamor that there is for public position, for Government employment. "The children cry for it," and the older ones refuse to be comforted without it. They may work under protest, but they don't contract under protest, nor draw their pay under protest. But when they get in, then the next proposition is that they want their compensation increased and their hours of labor diminished. Why all this scramble for Government employment? It is because the Government gives more pay for less work than they can get elsewhere.

The gentleman spoke awhile ago of the happiness that it gave him to-day to see the eight-hour law applied to mail-carriers. I will state that I was the one man who stood up in opposition to that proposition, but was overlooked in the count. [Laughter.] The mail-carriers, I believe, get from $900 to $1,300 a year for carrying letters about the streets and to private residences in cities.

I noticed some contracts awarded the other day for carrying the mail to my town. I saw where two men undertook to carry the mail each way out from the town where I live, where they have to ride 40 miles a day to carry the mail every day except Sunday. They have to have horses; they have to have vehicles to carry the mail; one carried it 20 miles each way and back daily for $490, and the other carried it the same distance for $500 a year.

Now they do it under contract. Why do they carry it for so little under contract? Because they come in competition with other people in that country. They ride in wind and sleet and they ride through mud and through rain. They carry this mail every day in the year except Sunday. They do it because their wages and their labor are put in competition with men who follow the ordinary avocations of life and who are to pay the taxes to carry out this bill if it ever passes. Three millions of back pay from the Navy Department alone, and no one knows how much in the other Departments, to men who have been fully paid years ago—paid what they agreed to work for and what they were glad to work for at the time, and more than most laborers were getting.

There are many vicious features in this bill. It proposes to constitute the Court of Claims into a tribunal to try we do not know how many millions of cases——

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman goes to that would he allow a friend of his to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. I think he has confused (perhaps I am wrong) the mail-carrier with the letter-carrier. The mail-carrier in his district is unlike in his relations to the Government to the letter-carrier. Take the mail-carriers in the country district away from the cities. They have a chance to carry in coaches and wagons passengers and things besides the mail. Where the mail is carried even sometimes on horseback they have a chance to do express business. They carry packages. My friend knows that, because he has ridden behind them many a time when little. [Laughter.] It is a different thing from allowing letter-carriers eight hours a day, when we can show you by the Postmaster-General's report that in New York City alone there is made extra beyond the cost of the delivery service one and a quarter millions of dollars. This is a business transaction. Yes, sir; in New York City alone there is made one and a quarter millions of dollars beyond the cost of the free-delivery service. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Out of New York business?

Mr. COX. I say out of the work of the letter-carriers of New York City.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Explain how the letter-carriers make that money and I will yield, for I am seeking information as well as giving it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I will do it. They make money for the United States, because when the Government causes them to carry local letters and deliver them "upstairs and downstairs and in my lady's chamber" [laughter] they make a million and a quarter more than the service costs. Where does that million and a quarter go? It goes to help people in other parts of the country.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Does the gentleman from New York say that more is charged for the letter carried by the letter-carrier than for a letter carried by Uncle Billy Walton from my town to Fulton? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COX. I do not know Billy Walton. [Laughter.] The gentleman has got away from my question; got after a person I do not know anything about.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. That is the trouble with the gentleman; he does not know anything about the country people represented by so many of us. [Laughter and applause.] He knows what the New York people and the people of the navy-yard want, but he does not know what the people of the United States want. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COX. I represented farmers in this House twenty-five or thirty years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. You did that so long ago, you have forgotten all about them. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. The gentleman must know otherwise, if he knows anything about myself, but I do not like to be debated about too much. It does not amount to much. It is not of consequence compared with the great men who come from Mississippi. [Laughter.]

But I say this, that I never gave a vote that was alien to the interests of your country in the days of its emergency, when they were rightfully standing by the country.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Oh! we will not go back to the war. [Laughter.] The gentleman is all right. Your record is good; but you are off on this bill and not up to the interests of the country people. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. COX. I suppose what applies to the country as a whole is good enough for the country people. Because I helped to keep the people of our country together, the country people ought not to complain.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. They do not want you to tax them unnecessarily, and claim it is for their interest because you helped to keep them together. Now, stand up to your record. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. My record is open to the gentleman and to the country; but if he will read in the RECORD in the morning his answers to me to-day, he will find out how irrelevant and inconsequential they are. My statement was that the letter-carriers of New York City, performing a peculiar free-delivery service that pays the Government annually nearly one and one-half million of dollars more than it costs, help to serve the people of the country and the gentleman's own town, where the mail is carried by one "Billy" somebody, as he tells us. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. That is exactly what I asked the gentleman from New York to explain. How do they do it? Do these letters pay more postage than those carried by the mail-rider?

Mr. COX. It increases the service and enlarges the number of letters sent and delivered.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. The letter-carriers paid in one and one-half millions of dollars, this gentleman says, but I might suggest in reply to that that this same postage, and only this same postage, was paid upon letters they carried, and nothing more than upon the letters some mail-carrier in my part of the country carries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I would like to go on, as I had a slight interruption. [Great laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman some additional time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have remained here in this House and have listened to proposition after proposition of this kind. Why, almost half of our time here is taken up in trying to undo some settlement that has been made between the Government and somebody in the past and give him something more.

I never have heard yet anybody suggest the reverse of that proposition on this floor. Nobody has ever arisen here and said the Government has paid too much and ought to get something back. There are no such propositions. It is always the other way. The equities we are asked to consider are always against the Government. It is strange how few seem to think of the great army of laborers who do not work for the Government, but who must work to pay those who do.

I, sir, think that we might very well permit these people who made these contracts with the Government twenty years ago and received their pay, and were no doubt glad to get it, to abide by the terms of their agreement. Let that payment stand and the whole thing rest there.

If it is the sense of Congress and the country that the eight-hour law should stand or should be enforced, let it be enforced; and when a man makes his contract for eight hours' work let him be paid for that number of hours.

Why, the way gentlemen talk you would think the Government employés had been working all these years under a system of conscription and enforced labor; that every one who had been employed to work for the Government had been coerced into doing the work; while, on the contrary, the Government can not furnish work for one-tenth of the men who are seeking employment. And I mention this again: I want you gentlemen on this floor who have constituents that are not overpaid, constituents who must pay all these taxes to keep up the Government, constituents whose hay will not keep under an eight-hour system of work, constituents in whose crops the grass will not stand still to wait for men who work only eight hours to clean it out, but grows the whole twenty-four hours, but constituents who must work in heat or cold, from dawn until dusk, to feed and clothe their families, and yet have to pay these taxes, to have some share of your consideration. They can not be pampered with Government employment; and I want you to consider them a little while you are considering the interests of people who have worked for the Government for sure pay.

The eight-hour law may have some good features. I did not get up to discuss that, but to oppose this ripping up settlements and going back and undoing them on questions of mere sentiment.

Why, take this bill and suppose it should pass. You have a Court of Claims, and you are referring bills there every day. That Court of Claims might sit for twenty years and they could not possibly get through with deciding cases that would go to that court under this bill. The number would be incalculable. Who knows who has labored for the Government twenty years back? You may say this man or that violated the eight-hour law. But where are they? Many of them are gone out, and they are not here to testify.

Who is here to represent the Government that was here then, and say whether or not A or B or C worked nine, ten, eleven, or twelve hours? Would not the investigation necessarily be ex parte? It is bound to be. It could not possibly be otherwise.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that there has not been, and there is not now, any means of arriving at a correct conclusion when such questions shall arise; and in addition to that, while there may have been estimates based on mere speculation, it is impossible for any human being to tell anything like what the expense of this legislation would be; whether it would involve an expenditure of ten or a hundred millions of dollars. Who can estimate? Nobody knows, even if it were possible to determine who had been so employed of the vast mass that have been paid by the Government in its service within the last twenty years.

Is it not better—I repeat, is it not better that these men should pocket any grievance they may imagine they may have, especially in view of the fact that they got what they were promised when they did the work and what they were doubtless glad to get, and that there should be an end of this matter some time, rather than to be constantly ripping open and tearing up the settlements once satisfactorily made?

I, for one, am tired of this never-ceasing anxiety that seems to consume some members of this House to take the people's money and bestow it on somebody who has been so fortunate as to get Government employment in the past by new propositions introduced in Congress of this kind. It is all wrong and we should quit it.

I yield the balance of the time back to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. I think gentlemen as a rule have an improper conception of the construction of the order made by Secretary Thompson. The reason the order was made by him was not because he wished to have the men reduced two hours or their compensation cut down from the rate for ten hours to the rate for eight hours, having been employed at the rate of ten hours; but it was because the Supreme Court had decided when the eight-hour law went into effect and men took employment for a day of eight hours they were to be paid at the rate they received for like labor working ten hours. Secretary Thompson says this:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 30, 1877.

The following decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is published for the information of the Navy.

Under this construction of the law regulating public labor, given by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Department has fixed the rate of labor for mechanics, foremen, leading-men, and laborers on the basis of ten hours a day. All workmen electing to labor only eight hours per day will receive a proportionate reduction of their wages.

R. W. THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was the Supreme Court that fixed that, and not Secretary Thompson. Secretary Thompson's order was simply to carry out the decision of the Supreme Court, that court having decided that the order of President Grant was in effect contrary to law. You will find the following decision by Secretary Thompson to be based on the same hypothesis.

This present bill is intended to amend that part of the law wherein it was deficient, in this, that the law as decided by the Supreme Court does not carry out the intent of the legislation. That is all there is in this bill. It is not, as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina, to create conditions or make new bases of contract and then to make a law to conform to those new conditions. That is not the case. The condition was created; but like most laws, and especially laws in the interest of the laboring men, when they are made there is always money enough found, and capital will come in and find some technicality whereby the intent of the legislation is defeated. This law is rather in the nature of a declaratory law than of a remedial statute.

If you ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the eight-hour law is carried out, let me refer you to a little fact I discovered a few days ago in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Notwithstanding the eight-hour law, the poor girls there are employed in that bureau for nine hours; and for the extra hour Uncle Sam cheats them out of three-eighths and five-eighths of a cent a day. It is the most petty larceny any one could be guilty of, and is quite unworthy of a great government.

Therefore it is time an act should be passed defining the existing law and declaring that the employés of the Government shall be paid the full rate of wages for ten hours a day if they are employed for that length of time, and that the Government shall not cheat them out of three-eighths and five-eighths of a cent a day.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the ten minutes which remain to me to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] desires to say something. I yield to him.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Alabama yields to me five minutes. I take that time for the purpose of responding to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], but I do not see him in his place.

A MEMBER. He is here.

Mr. COX. I do not care about responding to anything except that which will verify my own statements, and which I desire to go out in the RECORD, that it may be seen by members when they vote on the bill to-morrow, along with the peculiar statement of the gentleman from Mississippi. When I mentioned the fact that these men who lived in my district went across the river and worked in the navy-yard, and put in their formal protest because the law was not carried out, the gentleman began to twit me because I was laboring for my own constituency. This I do just as the gentleman does for his constituents, and as every member here who is faithful does for his constituents.

He then makes some comparison between the mail service in Mississippi and the letter-carrier service elsewhere. I tried to impress on the gentleman and on the House the fact that the letter-carrier eight-hour law was a measure giving fair and honest compensation—in time—to men who, in a business, mercenary point of view, make money for the Government. This surplus money we bestow in the order of our appropriations upon all sections, including the South. It goes into a common treasury and helps to run the mails in sparsely-populated districts, like Mississippi and other areas.

It is given, without grudging or stint, for their mail service. For the making, accumulation, and giving of this surplus we receive their peculiarly grateful votes and strictures upon measures of this kind. I do not refer to all of them, Mr. Chairman; I mean gentlemen who claim to be better informed than men who were members of this House and members of the Democratic party, taking care to be good Union men, when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] and others who reproach me and inspire him were mewling and so forth [laughter] in their mothers' arms.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the authentic facts about this letter-carrier system? I have sent for the Postmaster-General's report. Here are the figures. I ask to insert the table before making deductions.

The appropriation for the service for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1887, was $4,928,531.25. The cost of the service was $4,618,692.07; so that there was an unexpended balance of over $309,000, or $309,-839.18.

Now, since I have said that this cost was more than balanced, what employés or offices made that money that compensated the Government? Who trudged through the winter's slush and snows and through the blizzards of the last few days, in some cases losing their lives? Who are the men that march under the summer sun from twelve to fifteen hours a day in the large cities to make the net gain of the large sums which return the Government its outlay and more? I will show out of the one hundred and eighty-nine offices only thirty exceeded the cost of service. (Report of Postmaster-General, page 370.) In Boston the receipts were $504,942.94, and the net gain to the Government $193,-820.87. In Brooklyn the receipts were $316,937.05, and the net gain to the Government over $100,441.71. In Chicago the net gain was $192,580. In Philadelphia the net gain was more than half a million dollars, $567,000 and over. In St. Louis the cost was $177,585.77 and the receipts $274,123.72, showing a net gain of nearly $100,000. In San Francisco the net gain was over $59,000. In New York City, which is always being reproached here by some members, which is never mean, and which helps to pay the mail and letter carriers in distant parts of the country and in other cities—in New York City the receipts from local postage by this delivery system were $1,956,857.37, and the cost of the service, this hard, perilous, and onerous service, was only $676,-380.64, showing a net gain of $1,280,506.73. So that I am justified in saying that, and I will close with the justification, in answer to these ungrateful flings, in the heat of these harsh reproaches fixed upon those who simply propose that men who do so much and ask so little shall get not only hours of rest, but fair compensation for their service, which so chivalrously does so much for others.

We are enabled in New York, because of its density of population and commerce, to pay over to the Federal Treasury from the receipts from local postage on the delivery system alone over $1,280,000. Certainly a metropolis that can do that by the unflagging and arduous labors of these honest, intelligent, and hard-working letter-carriers deserves consideration at the hands of its beneficiaries and from the American Congress. This Congress, if it represents anything, should represent labor in all its best elements. It has no better element, sir, than that which is to be found among the letter-carriers of the country.

The aggregate results of the operations of the free-delivery system for the fiscal year and the comparison of the results with the preceding year will be shown by the following table:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] is entitled to the remainder of the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which is three minutes.

Mr. COBB. It is hardly worth while to enter into a discussion for that length of time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. COBB. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am one of those referred to as mewling in their mothers' arms, etc., when the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] was doing such distinguished wind service for the salvation of the country [laughter], but if I am I will remind him that there are two periods in people's lives when they are not at their best—when they are too young and when they are too old. [Laughter.]

So far as the figures read by the gentleman from New York from the report are concerned——

Mr. COX. The last report of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. So far as they are concerned, I do not know how anybody ascertains that the carrier service brings that money into the Treasury. The postal service of this country extends everywhere and is always increasing, and to say that because the post-office receipts increase that the letter-carriers bring in that money does not seem very reasonable.

Mr. COX. It is the delivery system that does it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. These mail-riders in Mississippi that I spoke of stand such blizzards as we have down there and such suns as we have, and travel through the country in mud, rain, and storm, and they do not have paved streets to travel over; they do not have a chance to go in to people's fires to warm themselves when they are cold. They ride 40 miles over bad roads in the country the coldest days that come, carrying the mails, and the letters they carry have just the same postage on them that the letters carried by the carriers in New York, and they are just as much entitled to extra compensation as these city letter-carriers who walk on paved streets.

Now, I heard the gentleman from New York say—I do not remember his exact words—something in regard to New York having done so much for the country. We have heard a good deal of that sort of talk here; but if I am not very much mistaken, the country has done a good deal for New York. That city is a sort of omnium gatherum. The poor devils in the country work to make money and the people in New York get most of it. That is about the way the thing runs. The gentleman spoke about the people there paying so much money for postage and turning it in to the Post Department for the benefit of the rest of the country. Sir, a large part of that is the postage upon letters which the people there send out to get trade from my constituents and the constituents of other gentlemen, and these very letters are, many of them, carried by the mail-riders of whom I spoke. They pay postage to secure the advantages of trade and communication that the mail facilities of the country afford them. I do not understand that New York is entitled to any special credit or advantage on this account.

Mr. COX. It was only the delivery system to which I referred.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAULBEE obtained the floor and said: I understand that the gentleman who has this bill in charge [Mr. TARSNEY] desires to move that the committee rise. With the understanding that I shall be entitled to the floor when this subject is resumed, I yield.

Mr. TARSNEY. Before moving that the committee rise, I will yield a moment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER], who wishes to have an amendment read and printed in the RECORD, that it may come up for consideration to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read for information.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. The amendment is designed to come in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided further, That prosecutions of claims hereunder shall be in the names of the persons who actually rendered the service claimed for, if living, or of their heirs or personal representatives, if deceased; and in no case shall any payment be made hereunder except to persons who actually performed the service claimed for, if living, or to their heirs or personal representatives, if deceased."

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment has been read in the time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY]. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] as entitled to occupy the floor when the consideration of this bill is resumed.

Mr. TARSNEY. Several gentlemen have amendments which they desire to propose. I ask that, without being read, these amendments be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, amendments which may be sent up by members will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The proposed amendments are as follows:

By Mr. MILLIKEN:

Insert after the word "mechanic," in line 3 of section 1, the words "or clerk or other employé."

By Mr. WASHINGTON:

Add the following:

"Provided, That any sum found due any claimant under the provisions of this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the claimant in person, or if claimant be deceased, payment shall be made to his personal representatives; or if paid by draft, such draft shall be made payable to the order of said claimant, or if deceased, to the order of his personal representatives; and such draft shall be mailed to his or their address."

Mr. TARSNEY. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1539) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, had come to no resolution thereon.

SUPPRESSION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. MCCOMAS, by unanimous consent, presented the following memorial; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Territories, to file the views of the minority in relation to the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes. I ask that the views of the minority be printed with the majority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and so printed.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire also to propose a bill as a substitute for Senate bill No. 12, reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] from the Committee on Territories. I ask that the proposed substitute be printed with the views of the minority, and that it be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I want to say with reference to the bill presented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that I understand it is a bill in the nature of a proposed amendment to the bill which has been reported by the majority of the committee, and perhaps it had better remain in that shape rather than go upon the Calendar. I want it understood that it is introduced as a proposed amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I design. I really was not aware what order the bill would take.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can either introduce it as an original bill or offer it as an amendment to the bill reported from the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. It is proposed by the minority of the committee as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill reported by the Senator from Nevada for the admission of Washington Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute is offered as an amendment, to be proposed by the Senator from Illinois when the bill is reached for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 800) for the relief of Stewart & Co., to report it with an accompanying resolution referring the bill to the Court of Claims, and I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 800) entitled "A bill for the relief of Stewart & Co.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of the fourteenth section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said section of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am unwilling to allow this resolution to pass without——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to an inquiry of order. I suppose that a resolution of this kind, which deals with public business and is not a mere opinion of the Senate——

Mr. MITCHELL. I can not hear the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am rising to an inquiry respecting a point of order. I suppose that resolutions of this character, which dispose of bills and other things, go on the Calendar, to come up like other subjects for the action of the Senate in their order. I submit, therefore, that this resolution is not now before the Senate for action, but should take its place on the Calendar with the other regular business of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the Senator from Vermont is entirely right; and as the Senator from Arkansas has some objection to the resolution, I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2461) appropriating $150,000 for quarters and barracks at the branches of the National Military Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 2462) for the relief of Charlotte Crumbaugh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2463) for the relief of Dwight Hall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2464) granting a pension to Mary Fennessey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2465) granting a pension to Charles T. Caldwell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2466) to authorize the retirement of Commander Joshua Bishop, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KENNA introduced a bill (S. 2467) granting an increase of pension to Capt. Cecil Clay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 2468) to confirm the title of the heirs or legal representatives of Henry Volcker, deceased, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 2469) for the relief of Annie L. Langworthy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 2470) to repeal section 714 of the Revised Statutes, allowing pensions to judges in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WAREHOUSE ENTRIES IN BOSTON CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury in response to resolution of February 24, 1887, in regard to certain transactions in the Boston custom-house, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the select committee to examine into the present condition of the civil service in all branches of the Government.

INTERRUPTION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. PLUMB March 16, 1888:

Whereas an almost or quite total interruption of freight traffic has occurred upon the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroads, railroads which are engaged in interstate commerce, and by reason of which interruption commerce between States is impeded and prevented:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, or a subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire whether such interruption of commerce is occasioned by the failure of such railroads, or either of them, to adopt necessary precautions or means for carrying freights delivered or tendered to them for transportation, or if they have been otherwise neglectful of their duties as common carriers, whereby said interruption has been brought about; and to make such further inquiry as may be necessary to determine the responsibility for the interruption of commerce mentioned; and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CULLOM. That is a resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who is not present. From a conversation between him and myself I think it is not his desire that the resolution shall come up at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that it shall not be in order to-day to move any contested case that comes up under the Anthony rule, so called.

I desire to call attention to the fact that while we have been at work on the Calendar for two days there are just as many pages of the Calendar this morning as there were when we began; and if we are to take up contested cases we shall consume the day and not accomplish much.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator refers to cases objected to?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, cases objected to. I have a bill which was reported from the Committee on Finance that I am very anxious to have some action upon, but I have refrained from calling it up, hoping that we might get through with a large number of the unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection, if the Senator will allow a bill to be explained briefly by the Senator who has it in charge.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course I do not propose to interfere with that.

Mr. CULLOM. If a bill can be explained before an objection carries it to the Calendar or passes it over, I have no objection to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont. But sometimes objections are made to a bill by persons imagining that it will lead to discussion when a mere explanation briefly by a Senator knowing about the bill would result in its being considered at once.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that the Senator from Vermont asks to have cases passed by that may be objected to, but they may still be debated and considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. But he wishes to exclude a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill when there is objection.

Mr. MORRILL. My request is that we shall not call up bills out of order which would be objected to if they came up in the regular course of the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator's suggestion to be that it shall not be in order to move to proceed to consider a bill notwithstanding an objection.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly.

Mr. MORRILL. That is the case.

Mr. HARRIS. Which motion relieves a case from the five-minute rule.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think the better course of procedure is to allow the Senator reporting the bill or interested in it to briefly explain it, and then, if there is objection that would lead to discussion, let it go over; but it is frequently the case that when a bill is reached a minute's explanation would obviate all objection and secure its passage.

Subject to that modification, with the understanding that we have the right to explain a bill when it is reached, I think the Senator from Vermont is right and that we should go on with the Calendar in that way. But I want to obviate the power of anybody to prevent the consideration of a bill when a moment's explanation would secure action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that during this day it shall not be in order, when the consideration of the Calendar is resumed under Rule VIII, to move to proceed to the consideration of any case, notwithstanding an objection, subject, however, to the modification that a Senator reporting a bill shall have the right to make a brief statement of its contents before objection is interposed. Is there objection to that understanding?

Mr. CHACE. As I understand it, that then becomes the rule for the day, does it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the unanimous consent should be given, the Chair would not feel at liberty to entertain any motion to proceed to the consideration of a case notwithstanding an objection. Is there objection? ["None."] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. I should like to inquire at what time Senate bill 2443, which was under discussion yesterday morning at the expiration of the morning hour, would be in order. It was postponed until to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it would properly come up under the order of morning business.

Mr. BLAIR. I would, then, say with reference to that bill that several Senators, upon both sides of the Chamber, have requested that it lie over still further, and I will ask for its postponement until next Tuesday morning. I ask unanimous consent for its postponement until next Tuesday morning, and I will say that I shall be glad to ask the Senate then to dispose of the pending question, which is that it be read the second time and referred.

Mr. PLATT. Does that make a special order of it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the bill will lie on the table.

Mr. VANCE. If it is in order on the bill which the Senator from New Hampshire proposes to postpone until next Tuesday, I wish to make a very brief statement in correction of some remarks which fell from him yesterday. I did not hear the remarks at the time, or I should have replied to them then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the bill lies upon the table subject to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed to its second reading; but if there be unanimous consent, the Senator from North Carolina will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. VANCE. My statement will not exceed two minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from New Hampshire used the following language in his remarks yesterday:

> Now, sir, when there are in the State of North Carolina alone twenty thousand men, as I am informed, without arms or without legs, poor, many of them dying in the almshouses of that State, and when all through the South there is a like condition of things, etc.

I wish simply to state that the Senator has been misinformed. There are not twenty thousand destitute Confederate soldiers in North Carolina, nor anything like it. There are less than three thousand disabled soldiers in the State. Those who are utterly helpless and without arms or legs are pensioned by the State. They are given a small pension, it is true, something like $100 a year, I believe, and last year something over $30,000 were expended in relieving the destitution of those who were unable to work. The great bulk of them are earning their living in the various occupations of life, and are in no way to be described as suffering and in great destitution.

That is all I desire to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of morning business being closed, the Secretary——

Mr. BLAIR. Pardon me. In reference to what the Senator from North Carolina has said, I will state that what I desired to say was that my information was to the effect that the number of wounded soldiers was what I mentioned. I presume my language should be corrected. I said that was the number of those simply who were wounded by loss of arms and legs. I did not mean that.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know of a single soldier in an almshouse in North Carolina, and none have ever died there, to my knowledge. That is not the way we treat those who shed their blood in defense of their State.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I rise to what I deem a question of privilege. I observe that the few remarks I made yesterday upon the bill just referred to have been in one or two particulars misquoted by the stenographer, so as a little to alter the sense. I ask the privilege of making the proper corrections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes the Senator from Virginia would have the right to have the necessary corrections made upon application to the Official Reporter.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the privilege of correcting them and reprinting them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will be no objection, the Chair understands.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. HOAR. The first bill on the Calendar I desire to have remain without losing its place. There is a bill pending in the other House on the same subject, and I prefer not to call up this bill in the Senate until the other House have acted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar at the point when the Senate last had it under consideration is Senate bill 192.

Mr. HOAR. I refer to the bill (S. 495) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill retains its place on the Calendar. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar at the point when the Senate last had consideration of the Calendar.

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURIES.

The bill (S. 192) to provide that judges of the United States circuit and district courts shall reduce their instructions to juries to writing, in all States wherein by the laws thereof State judges are required so to do, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "practice," to strike out the words

"and in such States no instructions shall be given to the jury by the court, or modified, except in writing;" so as to make the bill read:

That in all States wherein by the laws thereof judges of courts of record are required to reduce charges and instructions to juries to writing, judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall conform to such practice; and such written instructions shall be taken by the jury on their retirement, returned with their verdict, and retained with the files and be a part of the record in each case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 270) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection.

MARY F. POTTS.

The bill (S. 502) for the relief of Mary F. Potts was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. In regard to that bill I do not ask for its consideration at the present time. I should like to have it remain on the Calendar in its place, however. There is a similar bill pending in the other House, and I understand it will probably be under discussion to-day, and I do not care to have the Senate act upon this bill until the fate of the bill in the other House is determined.

Mr. HARRIS. I was requested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. PLATT. Let it stand in its present place on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that course. Let it go over for the present, at all events, while a similar bill is pending in the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

The bill (S. 1044) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States, and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as may be found due him thereon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to James M. Willbur of such sum as may be found due him for excess in weight of material and superficial measurement in illuminated tiling, frames, and supports thereof, placed by him in, on, and around the New York post-office and court-house building, in excess of the weight of that which was contracted for at the contract prices as stipulated with and paid to Bartlett, Robbins & Co. in their contract with the United States for illuminated tiling for that building, together with any increased and extra expense or cost incurred by Willbur resulting from any changes made in the weight and character of the tiling from that which was specified in the contract of Willbur with Bartlett, Robbins & Co.

The Secretary of the Treasury may make this settlement upon the report of such excess of weight and superficial measurement furnished by the experts, Solomon J. Fague and Archibald Given, of date April 21, 1886, to the Senate committee and on file with the Senate Committee on Claims; but if not satisfied with the report of such experts, the Secretary of the Treasury, within thirty days, is to cause a reweighing of the material, to be made by two sworn experts, one to be appointed by him and one by the claimant, and a third to be appointed by the two first appointed, in case they shall not agree; and he shall then pay to Willbur the difference of excess in weight and superficial measurement as found by these experts between the illuminated tiling and frames and supports thereof furnished by Willbur and that originally contracted for between Willbur and Bartlett, Robbins & Co. at the contract prices agreed upon for such work and material with and paid to Bartlett, Robbins & Co. by the United States.

Fifty-two thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out and execute the provisions of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. LEWIS.

The bill (S. 1499) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis, $411.22; to be in full remuneration of the payment made by Joseph N. Lewis out of his own private funds for account of the Government of the United States while he was acting as its commercial agent at Port au Prince, Hayti, in the year 1855.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABAN HEATH & CO.

The bill (S. 903) for the relief of Laban Heath & Co., of Boston, Mass., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$49,641.27" and insert "$13,621.31;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Laban Heath & Co., of Boston, Mass., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,621.31, which amount shall be in full for all claims of the said Laban Heath & Co. against the United States by reason of damages claimed by them on account of the imperfect execution of certain impressions of United States bonds designed for illustrating a work to be issued by the said Laban Heath & Co., called "The United States Bond Detector and Complete History of the United States Securities."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD RICE.

The bill (S. 1163) for the relief of Edward Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, in line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out "issue" and insert "pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" in line 7, after the word "Massachusetts," to strike out "duplicates of" and insert "the sum of $2,700 in full for;" in line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out "together with duplicates of the coupons of said bonds" and insert "and, in addition thereto, the interest;" in line 20, after the word "maturing," to insert "on said bonds;" in line 21, after the date "1868," to insert "to the date when said bonds ceased to bear interest;" and in line 25, after the word "against," to strike out "the originals of;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edward Rice, of Denver, in the State of Colorado, formerly of Worcester, in the State of Massachusetts, the sum of $2,700, in full for the following coupon bonds issued under the act of March 3, A. D. 1865, known as consols of 1867, namely: Nos. 104568 and 104569, of $100 each; Nos. 61857, 61858, and 61859, of $500 each; and No. 101302, of $1,000, and, in addition thereto, the interest maturing on said bonds after July 1, A. D. 1868, to the date when said bonds ceased to bear interest: Provided, Said Edward Rice shall first give bond, with sureties to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in a sum double the amount of said bonds, conditioned to secure the United States harmless against said bonds and coupons; said bonds having been lost by said Edward Rice on the 19th day of July, A. D. 1868.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF EXPORTED MEATS, ETC.

The bill (S. 535) providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. There is a most important subject in this bill, and the powers given under it to the Secretary of the Treasury particularly are very sweeping. Of course he can only act on the report of some agent. I should like the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] to advise the Senate, in the first place, whether this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It goes very far. Then I should like to understand, as the Secretary of the Treasury can not know anything of these subjects, and can only act upon information furnished him, whether or not it guards the rights of the people who own property which may be condemned under the regulations provided for so that they can have an investigation made, or whether the report the Secretary may adopt is final and conclusive as to the facts. Are the rights of persons sufficiently guarded?

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, this bill was introduced at the last Congress and was reported by the committee then and was passed by the Senate last year. There is really nothing new in this bill that has not passed through that degree of scrutiny at the last session; but as the Senator has asked I can answer that this bill was very carefully considered in the committee, both last year and this year, and the present report is a unanimous one in favor of its passage, and every degree of proper protection consistent with necessary vigor in supervising the very important subject has been attended to in the frame of this bill.

Mr. President, the only criticism that has been made upon this bill has been from interests in packing, shipping interests, that there was not sufficient convenience given to the supervision and certification, and that it would be improved if there were a provision by which the Secretary might provide for inspection at the place of packing, and I hold in my hand an amendment which I propose to have inserted in the first section, which is wholly occupied with that question. I will read it. It will come in at line 19 of section 1, on the second page, after the word "entry," and it merely relates to convenience for certification and examination:

Provided, That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall think it expedient to cause such inspection before mentioned to be made at the place of packing of such meats for exportation, he may do so by proper officers appointed for that purpose; and such inspection so made and properly certified shall be in lieu of the inspection hereinbefore provided for and shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this section.

This amendment I suppose no one will object to, and I am not aware that on the details of this bill any criticism has ever been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 19, after the word "entry," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall think it expedient to cause such inspection before mentioned to be made at the place of the packing of such meats for exportation, he may do so by proper officers appointed for that purpose; and such inspection so made and properly certified shall be in lieu of the inspection hereinbefore provided for and shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this section.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I ask whether it would not be better to make the bill a special order for some future time. The bill is a very important one.

Mr. EVARTS. It is true the bill is a very important one, but it has been very well understood. It has already passed the Senate twice, been reported upon by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and no citizens interested in the subject are unprovided for in the bill except the very interest which the amendment I have now offered covers, and this is simply to allow inspection at the place of packing, which is much more convenient to them, and not all done at the port of export.

Mr. COKE. Does it refer alone to meats?

Mr. EVARTS. "All salted pork and bacon intended for exportation." We have not a basis of reclamation at present, and it is very important that one should be made, as it will be by this bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from New York why the committee did not also include in this bill a proper inspection of live animals leaving the ports of the United States, which are now placed under restrictive municipal legislation on the other side? For instance, take the export of live cattle from this country. They reach an English port if you please. They are subjected to very restrictive laws or restrictive practices on that side. They are forced to be slaughtered at the point where they are received, in that way inflicting great loss on the shippers of the animals.

I can well see the propriety of such legislation as this with respect to pork and bacon and all kinds of provisions because of the objection that has been made in France, Germany, and other countries on the plea that the animals were diseased, and therefore that they have a right to make restrictive laws against their importation.

I am also glad to see that there is a section of the bill which provides for adulterated food and wines that come from other countries, and allows the President, by proclamation, to not permit their entry into the United States; but it seems to me that this bill should go further, and should include in its provisions some kind of inspection with respect to live animals. Will the Senator be willing to let the bill go over until to-morrow, keeping its place upon the Calendar? and I will try to prepare an amendment and submit it to him that will meet that view of the case.

There is also another provision of the bill which, while in some respects it might seem to be necessary, would in my opinion operate very injuriously to the interests of those who are engaged in the importation of live animals. As the law exists to-day (and this bill proposes to make it much more restricted with respect to the importation of live animals) they are forced to go into a sort of inspection yard, or quarantine yard. These quarantine yards are nothing in the world but pest-holes, as you can readily perceive that a quarantine hospital where yellow fever or small-pox is quarantined would not be supposed to be quite as agreeable as some other parts of the country outside of it. These cattle, whether diseased or not, whether brought from districts on the other side of the water that are infected or not, are forced into these quarantine stations, and the animals that have never been subjected by contact to any disease whatever are forced to go to the yards adjoining those where cattle are absolutely suffering with the disease. It does seem to me as though that was unnecessary, requiring the animals to be subjected to contact with the disease. I think some modification should be made in that regard.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from New Jersey will permit me to suggest that I think the propositions he mentions are found in the bill (S. 2083) to provide for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and to facilitate the exportation of live-stock and their products, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases among domestic animals, and for other purposes, a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MCPHERSON. But not yet acted upon.

Mr. PALMER. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. PADDOCK. And will be soon brought up.

Mr. PALMER. I think the matter to which he alludes will properly be considered when that bill comes up for discussion.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well, then; I will refrain from offering any amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION FOR LOSS OF BOTH HANDS.

The bill (S. 379) to allow soldiers and sailors in the United States service who have lost both hands an increased pension was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "hand," to insert "or the use of both hands;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all persons who, in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, have lost both hands, or the use of both hands, shall be entitled to a pension of $100 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE H. COGHILL.

The bill (S. 171) granting a pension to Jennie H. Coghill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jennie H. Coghill, widow of Thomas A. Coghill, late a private in Company F, Tenth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT H. BLAKE.

The bill (S. 1209) for the relief of Robert H. Blake was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the claim of Robert H. Blake, of Virginia, for personal property alleged to have been taken from his farm on the Rappahannock River, adjoining Bankford, in Stafford County, Virginia, between November 15, 1862, and June 20, 1863, by a portion of the Army of the Potomac, and alleged to have been used by such army, be referred to the Quartermaster-General with directions to investigate the same and report the facts to Congress, together with all the evidence in the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL February 1, 1888:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1209) for the relief of Robert N. Blake, having had the same under consideration, respectfully beg leave to submit the following report:

The claim in this case is for the sum of $5,755.50 for supplies belonging to the claimant, Robert N. Blake, and alleged to have been taken from his farm adjoining Banks's Ford, on the Rappahannock River, in the State of Virginia, under orders from officers in command of United States forces in November, 1862, and between the 15th of that month and the 20th of June, 1863, and used by the Army of the United States; and a list of which property, consisting principally of corn, hay, cord-wood, fodder, hogs, oxen, cattle, horses, etc., is hereto attached and made part hereof.

It is made to appear to your committee that the claimant during the war of the rebellion, in the fall of 1862 and winter and spring of 1863, was the owner of a valuable, well-cultivated, and well-stocked farm on the banks of the Rappahannock, in Stafford County, Virginia; that during the fall of 1862 and spring and summer of 1863 the United States forces and Army of the Potomac were encamped the most of this time on a portion of said farm, and during this time large levies were made from time to time, and from his personal property, on such farm, for the use of the Army, and used by the Army. For a small portion of the property so taken, hay and some other articles, receipts were given by the officers in command, while for the greater portion no receipts seem to have been given.

The evidence as to amount and value of the property so taken and used is not satisfactory and will not justify your committee in recommending payment in the amount claimed, or, in fact, in any specific amount. It is very evident, however, that certain amounts of hay, corn, coal, wood, and other items of personal property were taken from claimant's farm, and used by the Army as alleged. This farm, as appears from the evidence, was well stocked when the Army of the Potomac made its encampment there for the winter in the fall of 1862; and when it departed in June, 1863, it was stripped to a very great extent of everything of value.

The reason assigned why this claim was not presented to the Southern Claims Commission is that during the existence of that tribunal important papers connected with the claim and necessary to its consideration were lost, and were not found until some three months had elapsed after said commission had finally adjourned. The committee is inclined to accept this as an excuse in this case.

The evidence is clear that Mr. Blake was a thoroughly loyal man all through the war. Your committee, in view of all the circumstances, recommend that this claim, and all papers connected therewith, be referred to the Quartermaster-General, with instructions to investigate the same and report all the facts, together with the evidence, to Congress, at his earliest practicable convenience; and your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Secretary would read the bill again; it is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Oregon if he can have read to us the evidence of the supposed accident which caused the loss of papers which led this claimant to omit to present his claim to the Southern Claims Commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. The evidence in the case was before the committee. I think it is his own affidavit on that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let the bill go over, and I will look up the affidavit. I do not like the looks of the claim.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose there is no objection to the case going to the Quartermaster-General to report the facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There would not be, only that always implies a mortgage, and I want to see on what ground it is that he claims that he failed on any principle of accident to submit the case to the Southern Claims Commission. I will take the trouble to look at the papers.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Committee on Claims, every day almost, is met by such cases and has refused many such applications.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 5728) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF SOUTHERN UTES.

The bill (S. 104) authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from the State of Colorado to the Uintah Valley reservation, in the Territory of Utah, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. Let that bill go over.

Mr. BOWEN. I wish the bill to keep its place on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

JOHN W. BLAKE.

The bill (S. 1376) for the relief of John W. Blake was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to John W. Blake, of the city of Indianapolis, Ind., the pay and allowances of a captain of infantry in the volunteer service from the 23d of June, 1861, to the 21st of July, 1861, less any amounts paid him during that term, which shall be in full payment of all claims which Blake may have against the Government of the United States for back pay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. STEWART February 2, 1888:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1376) for the relief of John W. Blake, report as follows:

The committee adopt the report of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Said report contains all the facts in the case, and is as follows:

[Senate Report 441, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1631) for the relief John W. Blake, respectfully report:

The following correspondence with the War Department sufficiently explains the nature of this case:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 17, 1884.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, inclosing S. 1631, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, a bill which appropriates the sum of $1,700 as full payment of all claims that John W. Blake, of Indianapolis, Ind., late captain of Company C, Tenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, may have against the Government of the United States for back pay and interest due him as brigade inspector and brigade commissary on the staff of General W. S. Rosecrans, during three months' service in the war of 1861-'65.

"In reply to your request for information in regard to the subject-matter of the bill, I beg to invite attention to the inclosed report of the 15th instant from the Adjutant-General of the Army, from which it appears that Captain Blake is equitably entitled to the pay of a captain of infantry from June 23 to July 21, 1861.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
"Secretary of War.

"Hon. BENJAMIN HARRISON,
"Of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate."

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, April 15, 1884.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter of Hon. Benjamin Harrison, United States Senator, inclosing a bill (S. 1631, Forty-eighth Congress, first session) for the relief of John W. Blake, with request for information in regard to the subject, and to report as follows:

"The records of this office show that John W. Blake was mustered into service as captain, Company C, Tenth Indiana Volunteers, with company April 25, 1861, to serve three months.

"On June 22, 1861, he was detached from his command as brigade major on the staff of Brig. Gen. W. S. Rosecrans, and on July 8, 1861, as acting brigade commissary. He was relieved as such and directed to rejoin his regiment July 21, 1861, but the records fail to show that he returned to his regiment or that he rendered any further service to the Government.

"John W. Blake was paid as captain, Company C, Tenth Indiana Volunteers (three months), from April 24 to June 23, 1861, and Abram O. Miller was paid as captain of same company from April 24 to include August 5, 1861, on which latter date the company was mustered out of service.

"Under the record it would seem that Captain Blake is equitably entitled to the pay of a captain of infantry from June 23 to July 21, 1861, although such payment, through the error arising from improperly dropping Captain Blake upon his detail to staff duty, and by filling his place by Captain Miller, would result in further paying two officers in the same grade for the same period.

"No such grade as 'brigade major' is known to the service.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

"The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR."

The committee report the bill favorably, with amendments, and recommend its passage as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. DANIEL N. BASH.

The bill (S. 258) for the relief Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers, in settling and adjusting the accounts of Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster United States Army, to credit him with $7,350.93, Government funds, of which he was robbed at Antelope Springs, Wyo., March 18, 1887, without his default, while en route to pay the troops at Fort McKinney, Wyo., by one Charles Parker, since arrested and convicted of the robbery, and now imprisoned and serving his term in the penitentiary at Laramie City.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. SPOONER. The report is somewhat lengthy, and perhaps I can state to the Senator from Vermont what the case is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I waive the request for the time being.

Mr. SPOONER. This bill is for the relief of Major Bash, who is at present a paymaster in the Army, and is based upon the following facts:

Major Bash was in 1887 on duty at San Antonio, Tex., where he had been on duty for a long time. He was ordered to Cheyenne depot, Wyoming Territory, and before his arrival at that post was ordered by General Crook to proceed to Fort McKinney for the payment of troops at that post.

It ought to be said that upon his arrival from Texas he was in ill health, and before he left Cheyenne he applied to the Quartermaster's Department for a safe, to which, under the rules of the Department, he was entitled, in order to enable him to transport in safety these funds. He was informed that there was no safe, except one that was out of repair. He asked that that safe be repaired and furnished to him. He was informed that under the law (although I think it would have cost but a few dollars to repair the safe) it was necessary to advertise for ten days for proposals to repair the safe, causing delay and expense. Major Bash offered to pay the expense out of his own pocket if they would have the safe repaired and furnished to him for the transmission of the money. They agreed to do it, but failed to do it, and, as his orders were peremptory, he was obliged to leave without the safe.

When he arrived at Douglas, Wyo., for he was to receive there a large part of the money, he attempted there to obtain a safe, but was unsuccessful. He also attempted to obtain a sack from the express company such as is used by the express companies in the transmission of funds, but he was unable to secure that. He was obliged to go without either the sack or the safe, having done all that any man could be expected to do to secure both.

At Douglas he met with an escort, consisting of a sergeant and one man, and he proceeded on his journey after having given, as the committee found upon a careful examination of the testimony, proper orders to his escort. At another point, where they stopped for breakfast, Major Bash found that in his absence his escort had left the stage without carrying with them the valise containing the money. He reprimanded them sharply, and cautioned them against being careless again on the journey; and when they stopped for dinner at Antelope station, where the robbery occurred, the testimony clearly shows that when he left the stage to go to the station he left with this money his clerk and his escort and went to the store. He was there, perhaps, ten or fifteen minutes. He then went to dinner, and at dinner he found, to his surprise, the clerk and the escort. They, within a few moments, left the room to go back to the stage; and during his absence the valise with the money had been stolen by a cowboy who was at that station. He was pursued, and shots were exchanged, but the escort was not provided (as was admitted by the War Department) with adequate arms, and the thief escaped with the money.

We were not satisfied that after the robbery, in the light of what had happened, Major Bash had exercised all the diligence that was possible; but we found that he exercised extraordinary diligence in the attempt to procure a safe, and that he had done, all things considered, all that could be reasonably asked of him under the circumstances. There was a court of inquiry organized, which found that he had been somewhat negligent in the orders which he gave to the escort as to taking care of the funds. We examined the testimony with great care and find that that finding was not sustained by the evidence. There is a letter from each of the officers composing the court commending the case to the favorable consideration of Congress. There is also in the report a letter from General Crook advising that this relief be afforded to this officer. There is also a letter from General Terry, which is very brief, and which I beg leave to read:

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE MISSOURI,
Chicago, December 7, 1887.

As the facts developed in relation to the robbery of Major Bash clearly indicate that he made strenuous efforts to provide for the safety of the official funds in his custody, which efforts, owing to the want of proper means at the disposal of the Government, failed, the views expressed by General Crook are concurred in.

ALFRED H. TERRY, Major-General, U. S. A.

The recommendation of General Terry is also concurred in by Lieutenant-General Sheridan. There are among the papers certificates from a large number of officers, most of whom are famous for gallant services during the war, stating that they have known Major Bash for a great many years, and that he is a man who has been uniformly careful and painstaking with regard to his duties.

The committee felt, after giving the case a very careful investigation, that under all the circumstances it was but an act of simple justice to relieve him from this liability.

Mr. CULLOM. I only desire to say a word, Mr. President, in corroboration of what the chairman of the Committee on Claims has stated as to the facts of the case, and to add that I have known Major Bash for probably twenty years, and know him to be a thoroughly honorable and sober man, and faithful in the discharge of his duties. I think it is a clear case where he ought to be relieved from this embarrassment under which he now rests.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to meddle with these matters, but I have read this report two or three times, and am thoroughly convinced that Major Bash has a very good case, and I am very glad to know it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENT WORKS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 81) to authorize the purchase of the lands necessary for the construction of locks and dams on the Cumberland River was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, which was to strike out the whole joint resolution and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings, for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, right of way, or material needed to enable him to prosecute works for the improvement of rivers and harbors for which provision has been made by law; such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted: Provided, however, That when the owner of such land, right of way, or material shall fix a price for the same which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, shall be reasonable, he may purchase the same at such price without further delay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear this measure explained. It is a bill of pretty large moment. What is the matter with the Cumberland River, and what is the present state of the locks and dams on it? I should like to hear it explained, if the Senator in charge of the bill will do it.

Mr. DOLPH. This measure came to us as a joint resolution proposing to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase or condemn the necessary land for locks on the Cumberland River. In the river and harbor bill which failed to become a law because it did not receive the signature of the President at the last session of Congress there was a general provision authorizing the condemnation of land necessary for river and harbor improvements, and also providing for an agreement between the parties and the Secretary of War, similar to the general provision substituted as an amendment for the House joint resolution by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the condition of public work on the Cumberland River?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate Committee on Commerce has substituted, under the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, a general provision providing in all cases for the exercise of this authority by the Secretary of War. The Senator did not hear the amendment which was read. It is a general provision which takes the place of the particular provision of the House resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I did not hear. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection if the provision is adequate. I only heard the original resolution before.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to facilitate the prosecution of works projected for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

CŒUR D'ALENE RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 38) granting to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 3, line 17, after the word "railroad," to insert "including charges of transportation;" so as to read:

And the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad, including charges of transportation, shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to a typographical or grammatical error in line 8, section 2, after the words "water station," where the language is "not to exceeded."

Mr. DOLPH. Let that be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "exceed" will be inserted in place of "exceeded," if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the last section, as to when the act shall be in force. It is entirely unnecessary and unusual.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNTIES OF VOLUNTEERS.

The bill (S. 1035) for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the Senate will turn to Order of Business 352, being the bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of the volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry. I ask that the bill be taken up and passed, by striking out the provisions of the House bill and inserting the Senate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You want to postpone the Senate bill indefinitely and let the House bill take its place.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes. I want the House bill taken up now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House bill will be read.

The bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of the volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the act entitled "An act in relation to bounties," approved April 22, 1872, be amended by striking out the words "before August 6, 1861;" and said act, as hereby amended, shall have full force and effect from April 22, 1872.

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reconsider the claims of all soldiers and their heirs who may have been denied the bounty of $100 granted by the act of April 22, 1872, under any construction of said act which has since been modified or rescinded, and such claims shall, if found correct and just, be allowed and paid, provided the soldiers were enrolled or enlisted for three years prior to July 22, 1861, under the proclamation of the President of the United States of May 3, 1861, and the orders of the War Department issued in pursuance thereof, and were actually mustered into the service of the United States and honorably discharged.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. COCKRELL. The reading of the report will be about as short an explanation as can be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can explain in a moment. The provision of the first section of the proposed amendment is to modify the law of April 22, 1872, by striking out the words "before August 6, 1861." The law is in the report. The whole thing is in the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whereabouts in the statutes?

Mr. COCKRELL. The act of April 22, 1872. I suggest that the report be read. I think it is about as short as any explanation I could make.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL from the Committee on Military Affairs February 2, 1888:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1035) "for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers," have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

The first section of this bill proposes to amend the law, "An act in relation to bounties," approved April 22, 1872, by striking out the words "before August 6, 1861."

The second section directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to reconsider the claims of all soldiers and their heirs who have been denied the bounty of $100 under said act of April 22, 1872, under any construction of said act which has since been modified or rescinded.

Your committee referred the bill to the Second Auditor for examination and report, and received in answer the following:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., January 27, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 26th instant, inclosing Senate bill No. 1035, for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers, and House bill 1387, for the relief of volunteers of the Fourth Iowa; and in reply to your questions have the honor to say that the provisions of the Senate bill would cover the regiment intended to be provided for in the House bill. The latter is identical in its provisions with Senate bill No. 795, which was referred to me on the 17th instant by Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON, to whom I made a report on the 20th.

"I beg leave to inclose a copy of that report, which, I think, will afford you all the information you desire. In my judgment, both sections of Senate bill 1035 should be enacted into law.

"Respectfully, yours,

"WM. A. DAY, Auditor.

"Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
"United States Senate."

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., January 20, 1888.

"SIR: Replying to your inquiries of the 17th instant, in connection with Senate bill 795, as to the probable number of men who would be entitled to bounty if the provisions of the bill were general, and what objections seem to exist to making the measure embrace all men who enlisted prior to July 22, 1861, and were mustered in, I have the honor to say:

"1. As at present advised I do not think the number would exceed 1,500, but I have not been able to obtain such data as would warrant me in making a positive statement on the subject.

"2. No objections occur to me. On the contrary, I favor the enactment of a law which will place on the same footing with regard to bounty all men who enlisted prior to July 22, 1861, under the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, and who were actually mustered into the service of the United States and honorably discharged therefrom. With that end in view a bill was prepared for the Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, and was referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs December 21, 1887. I inclose a copy of that bill (Senate 1035), and beg leave to suggest that if it be substituted for Senate bill 795 it will not only effect the object sought to be attained by the latter bill, namely, the relief of the Fourth Iowa Volunteers, but it will afford relief to members of other organizations whose claims are equally meritorious.

"Respectfully, yours,

"WM. A. DAY, Auditor.

"Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
"United States Senate."

The law proposed to be amended by the first section of this bill reads as follows:

"An act in relation to bounties.

"Be it enacted, etc., That every volunteer, non-commissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer who enlisted in the military service of the United States prior to July 22, 1861, under the proclamation of the President of the United States of May 3, 1861, and the orders of the War Department issued in pursuance thereof, and was actually mustered before August 6, 1861, into any regiment, company, or battery which was accepted by the War Department under such proclamation and orders, shall be paid the full bounty of $100, under and by virtue of the said proclamation and orders of the War Department, in force at the time of such enlistment and prior to July 22, 1861: Provided, That the same has not already been paid.

"Approved April 22, 1872."

This law was evidently intended as a law for adjusting and equalizing bounties, and was intended to provide a bounty of $100 to the soldiers who enlisted in the military service in response to the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, and were actually mustered into the service, and fixed August 6, 1861, as the day before which they were required to have been mustered into the service. Apparently the only reason for the insertion of that day was the fact that on that day Congress by law legalized all the acts, proclamations, and orders of the President issued after March 4, 1861, and prior to that date, in regard to the Army and Navy. No valid reason seems to exist why those who responded to this proclamation of May 3, 1861, and enlisted in the service prior to July 22, 1861, and were mustered before August 6, 1861, should receive this bounty, whilst others who responded equally as promptly and enlisted prior to July 22, 1861, and were not mustered prior to August 6, 1861 (which in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred was not their fault, and who were mustered just as soon as mustering officers could reach them), should be denied this bounty. Equal and exact justice would seem to require that all who responded to the proclamation and enlisted prior to July 22, 1861, and were actually mustered into the service and were honorably discharged, should be placed upon an equal footing and receive equal amount of bounty, and therefore section 1 is right.

In regard to section 2. In adjusting claims under the act of April 22, 1872, the accounting officers of the Treasury adopted the rule laid down by the Secretary of War in construing the act of July 22, 1861, and decided that—

"Those who were enlisted and mustered as above, and who were discharged for promotion, are not entitled to this bounty, as such discharge is not considered a muster-out of the service as contemplated in General Order No. 15, 1861, under which the contract was made."

And Mr. Auditor French, on the 11th day of April, 1870, decided that—

"A discharge for promotion does not entitle the soldier promoted to this bounty."

This decision governed the accounting officers of the Treasury Department in passing upon bounty claims to December 24, 1885, when it was overruled or rescinded, on the ground that the soldier discharged for promotion was honorably discharged within the meaning of General Order No. 15, 1861.

General Order No. 15, issued May 4, 1861, by the War Department, as well as General Order No. 25 of the War Department, issued May 26, 1861, provides that every private who entered the service under the plan set forth should be paid, when honorably discharged, the sum of $100. The proclamation of the President May 3, 1861, and such orders of the War Department were, by section 3, 12 Statutes, 326, legalized and made valid to the same intent and to the same effect as if they had been issued and done under the previous express authority of the Congress of the United States.

Since this action or decision of December 24, 1885, became known, many soldiers whose cases had been rejected under the former construction of the act of 1872 renewed their applications for the one-hundred-dollar bounty and were again rejected on the ground that they had already been once adjudicated, and that under section 191, Revised Statutes, the action of the Second Comptroller in formal disallowance of these claims for bounty pursuant to the decision of 1872 and prior to December 24, 1885, was final and conclusive upon all concerned and subject to review only by Congress and the proper courts, and that the subsequent decision of 1885 reversing the prior one can not apply to the cases already decided and determined, and such cases can not be reopened.

The class of claimants this affects consists generally of men who volunteered as private soldiers and were afterwards promoted, and in some instances for gallantry in action. They filled the conditions of the act of 1872, and were legally entitled to the benefits thereof, but were denied such benefits by what must be considered as misinterpretation of the law, and this misinterpretation of the law is now construed as a bar to a reconsideration and readjustment of their claims. Therefore, in the opinion of your committee, in order to do equal and exact justice and to carry out the full intent of the act of April 22, 1872, section 2 should also be enacted.

Your committee therefore report the bill back to the Senate and recommend its passage.

Mr. MANDERSON. This bill has received very careful attention in the Committee on Military Affairs, and is approved by the Auditor of the Treasury who has the adjustment of these matters. I think there can be no possible objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill (S. 1035) for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The bill (S. 667) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the words "bridge and," to strike out "apparatus" and insert "approaches;" so as to read:

That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the North Dakota and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and to its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, after the word "draw," to strike out:

And provision shall be made in the height of the bridge, and in the location and construction of abutments and approaches, to allow the free passage of flood water.

And insert in lieu thereof:

And the bottom chord of the bridge shall not be of less elevation than one foot above the plane of the highest flood known at the locality, and provision shall also be made in the location and construction of abutments and approaches to allow the free passage of flood water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 5, after the word "by," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of the said bridge, is hereby expressly reserved, and any alterations or changes that may be required by the Secretary of War in the bridge constructed under this act shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same, at its own expense; and if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri to an apparent typographical error in line 38 of section 2, where the word "steam" occurs.

Mr. VEST. It ought to be "stream;" so as to read "channel of the stream."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI BRIDGE AT NATCHEZ.

The bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi at or near Natchez, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. VEST. I wish to offer an amendment on the part of the committee. Since the bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce the Board of Engineers of the War Department has reported in regard to all the bridges on the Mississippi River. In accordance with their recommendation I am directed by the committee to move that in section 3, line 5, the word "five" be stricken out before "hundred" and "six" inserted; and in the same line the words "seventy-five" before "feet" stricken out, so as to make a span of 600 feet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 5, after the word "than," it is proposed to strike out "five hundred and seventy-five" and insert "six hundred;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the main channel-span shall not be less than 700 feet wide in the clear, to be placed at right angles to the direction of the current, and that the spans on either side of and next to the main span shall not be less than 600 feet in clear width, and that the height in the clear of the spans and the location of the piers shall be approved by the Secretary of War before the bridge is constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 8 of section 3, after the word "constructed," I move to insert:

Provided, That the height of said span shall not be less than 75 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I notice a misprint in line 4 of section 1, where the letter "a" is used instead of the letter "r." It reads "coaporation" instead of "corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made, if there is no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] expected to call up the bill for the admission of Dakota to-morrow; but that Senator has informed me that he will prefer to call it up at a later day. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the consideration of business on the Calendar under the rule as made for to-day may continue through to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the Calendar under the eighth rule be continued to-morrow after the morning business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. Of course the modification of the rule made this morning on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will apply to-morrow.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I gave notice that I would to-day, after the morning business, ask to be heard on the motion to refer the President's message. Not having had an opportunity to-day, I should like to be heard to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to interfere with the Senator from Delaware. Indeed, I had forgotten that he proposed to address the Senate. It will not be understood that the unanimous consent cuts him off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts modifies his request so as to except the Senator from Delaware making remarks to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. My friend from Delaware can have the floor to-morrow. It is so understood.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate this morning that during the day to-day the rule should be so far modified that no person should move to take out from the operation of the rule any measure pending on the Calendar. I suppose the Senate desires to have that understanding applied to this extension for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts state his request again, and the Chair will call for objection?

Mr. HOAR. The request is that, subject to the right of the Senator from Delaware to address the Senate, the consideration of bills on the Calendar continue through to-morrow as under the order made for to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Massachusetts. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. There being no objection, that will be the order of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 8, before the word "years," to strike out "ten" and insert "two;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order across said reservation within two years from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 1817) to grant to the State of Oregon townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, for a public park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 13, after the word "inalienable." to insert "by the State of Oregon;" in line 17, before the word "buildings," to insert "roadways and," and in line 18, after the word "fire-wood," to insert "for use upon the reservation and for the preservation of the forests against fires;" so as to read:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Oregon the tract of land embracing townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east, of the Willamette meridian in the State of Oregon, within the limits of which is situated Crater Lake, for the purposes of a public park, upon condition that said State shall, within three years from the passage of this act, by an act of its Legislative Assembly, accept this grant; that the premises shall be held for public use as a public park and place of public resort and forest reserve and shall be inalienable by the State of Oregon for all time, and that said State shall never cut or remove or authorize or permit the growing timber upon said tract to be cut or removed therefrom except to the extent that may be necessary for the construction of roadways and buildings thereon for the accommodation of visitors and for firewood for use upon the reservation and for the preservation of the forests against fires, and shall enact and enforce suitable laws for the protection and preservation of the same.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

But leases for a term not exceeding fifteen years may be granted for such portions of said premises as may be necessary for hotels and other similar purposes for the accommodation of visitors; all income derived from such leases to be expended for the preservation and improvement of the property and in the construction of roads thereon and leading thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the end of the bill, to add:

Congress reserves the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act or any provision thereof, or to declare that the trusts declared in this act have not been duly executed by the State of Oregon; and, upon the making of such declaration, the title and possession of said land shall revert immediately to the United States, but the rights of lessees under this act shall be saved to them according to the terms of their respective leases, and no lease shall include the exclusive right to have and enjoy the privilege of access to Crater Lake, or to any other conspicuous object of natural curiosity.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a recommendation of the President of the United States, communicating a report of Major Powell to set aside this tract of land—that is, Crater Lake and the adjoining property—as a public reservation. An amendment has been suggested as to the description of the land to be embraced within this reservation, and I move to insert in line 4, after the word "land," the description which Major Powell has suggested instead of the printed description in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "land," it is proposed to strike out the words:

Embracing townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east of the Willamette meridian.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Beginning at the northwest corner of section 5 of township 27 in range 3 east of the Willamette meridian, and extending due south 30 miles to the southwest corner of section 35 of township 31 in range 3 east of said meridian, thence extending due east until it meets the western boundary of the Klamath Indian reservation; thence northwardly and coterminously with said boundary of the Klamath Indian reservation as far as the northwesternmost corner thereof, thence due north to a point due east of and on the same parallel as the place of beginning, thence due west to the place of beginning.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FRYE. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that the change of description will make it necessary to change the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is not yet passed. The title will come up after the passage. The attention of the Chair is called by the Secretary to a verbal correction which is needed in line 32. The word "lesees" should be "lessees." The correction will be made if there is no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to amend the title by striking out, after the word "Oregon," in the first line, all down to and including the word "Oregon," in the last line, and inserting "certain lands in that State;" so as to read:

A bill to grant to the State of Oregon certain lands in that State for a public park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following additional section to the bill:

That the words "and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may, at public vendue, and upon not less than twenty days' notice, sell and dispose of lands assigned or set off to the United States in payment of such debts, or vested in them by mortgage or other security for the payment of such debts," contained in section 3208 of the Revised Statutes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

other animals destructive to oyster life, and also to ascertain whether any and what protective measures should be adopted in the premises, and to report upon the same to the next Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Chair (without meaning the slightest criticism, because he is doing what his predecessor, the regular chairman, did), would at the third reading have the title of each bill reported again, so that every Senator can hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to adopt the suggestion.

PENSIONS OF WIDOWS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 998) to restore pensions in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the act "to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1880, shall be construed so as to include within its provisions all officers and enlisted men in the Army, and their widows and minor children.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the bill explained a little. I do not know what it means.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill applies, I think, to five widows of Army officers who served in the Mexican war, and are consequently old women. The law cited in the bill actually gives them $5 a month more than they are now receiving, but by the operation of a law which was passed quite a number of years ago the pension was inadvertently reduced from $25 to $20. That illustrates the idea. The bill only applies to the widows of five old officers. An act was passed to rectify the wrong, but by accident it was made to apply only to the widows of naval officers and omitted these five or six. I think there are five such widows of officers who belonged to the Army.

The bill is simply to extend to them the same privilege which was extended to the widows of the naval officers by giving them the additional $5 a month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much would that make these widows of the Army officers have? The Senator will remember, of course, that the naval pensions are paid out of the fund raised by prize-money, and there might be—I do not say there is—a distinction in that respect in regard to the quantum to which we might go.

Mr. BLAIR. It makes just $5 a month more than they are now receiving, and there are five of them.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO ARMY NURSES.

The bill (S. 373) for the relief of women enrolled as army nurses was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in section 1, line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

That all women regularly enrolled in the United States service as army nurses or sanitary agents during the late war of the rebellion, and who rendered six months' service in the hospitals, diet kitchens, or on the battle-fields, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom; or who, prior to the completion of the period named, were disabled in the line of duty and honorably discharged, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed on the list of pensioners of the United States and entitled to $25 per month; and such pensions shall commence from the date of filing the application in the Pension Office after the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no report, I understand.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, yes, there is a report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a report; No. 569.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the report be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report is not marked on the bill as printed and put on the Calendar. I did not know there was any report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the report read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR March 13, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 373) for the relief of women enrolled as army nurses, etc., having considered the same, report it back to the Senate with an amendment, to wit:

Strike out the word "twelve," in the twelfth line, and insert in place thereof the words "twenty-five," and thus amended recommend its passage.

The surviving nurses of the Army are now, nearly all of them, elderly and venerable women, disabled by hard service in the care of the sick and wounded soldiers of the country or by the infirmities of age. Their numbers are so reduced by death that, according to the best information which has been obtained after two years or more by careful and systematic inquiry and correspondence instituted by the Army Nurses' Association, there are, who would be included in the purview of this bill, an average of not more than six or eight in each State of the Union.

Many of them expended large sums of their private fortunes for the soldiers while engaged in the terrible service they rendered in hospital and frequently on the battle-field. Most of them gave away all they received from the Government when anything was paid to them; generally their service was gratuitous, and in many cases they paid their own expenses; and, as a whole, the nurses of the Army during the war gave to the country and the world the highest and holiest example of the sublime in patriotic devotion which the records of time afford.

For several years special acts have been passed providing for isolated cases, in sums varying from $12 to $25 per month, and perhaps in some instances a still higher sum. But it is time that this noble band of women be adopted as the nation's sacred charge, to provide for whom shall hereafter be a most grateful duty and the source of honorable pride.

This duty has been too long neglected, and it must ever be the cause of deep regret and a reflection upon the gallantry of this mighty people that twenty-seven years of continuous general pension legislation of great variety, and involving immense sums of money, have elapsed before these neglected benefactors of their country have received even the slight attempted recognition provided for in this bill.

The sum of $25 per month is little enough to pay to the few survivors of these more than Roman matrons, whose story is one of the chief glories of the Republic.

We append the plain, but affecting and impressive, statement submitted to your committee by the delegation representing the National Army Nurses' Association.

"ARMY NURSES' ASSOCIATION,
"Washington, D. C., February 29, 1888.

"To the honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

"GENTLEMEN: We appear before you as a committee representing the 'Army Nurses' Association,' the only organization of its kind in the country, with its headquarters in Washington, and a membership composed of women from all the loyal States from Maine to California. As women whose services allow us to speak with absolute certainty of our hospitals and the labors performed therein, we ask to be considered on this subject.

"For the four years of the war—years equal to a lifetime of labor and pain, and endured as bravely as well by women as by men—we were engaged in hospital work and saw every phase of it, and we earnestly request that the recent discriminations made in the rates of $12, $20, and $25 per month in the allowances of nurses' pensions for their own services be corrected; and that all women who shall satisfactorily prove their own service as regularly, permanently, and effectively on duty as soldiers, each under military authority and subject to orders of army surgeons in charge of sick and wounded soldiers in the United States military hospitals, sent wherever most needed, be considered on a uniform basis, namely, the rating $25 per month, as a general law, whenever they shall seek pension upon the ground of disability or present necessity.

"This should exclude those women who had extra care or responsibility in the distribution of hospital stores, or were in charge of others as 'superintendents of nurses,' among whom are our worthy president, Harriet P. Dame, of New Hampshire, whose personal benevolence in the donations for hospitals at the beginning of the war, untiring zeal and responsibilities in the distribution of stores for over four years in the Army of the Potomac; our vice-president, Dr. Susan A. Edson, of Ohio, whose knowledge of surgery enabled her to be most effective during the war, and later service in the care of President Garfield; 'Mother' Bickerdyke, whose name is a household word in the West, who distributed hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of hospital stores committed to her special charge; Joanna W. Turner, whose judicious distribution of large and valuable stores, her arduous and responsible duties while in charge of the sick and wounded on board the Mississippi River hospital transport boats, with others who might be named. Such women as these, we claim, did service which entitles them to as large a specific rating as is allowed to any soldier, by general laws, namely, $72 per month, provided they have present disability by age or otherwise.

"Such women as served, who are now entitled to or deserving a pension on account of deceased husband or son, should be allowed an increase for their own service (should they seek it) as much as other women for their own services are considered entitled to. Each case should then be considered on its own merits or status; if a woman already pensioned for a husband's or son's service receives by law $12, $15, $17, $20, $25, or $30 per month, and she asks further pension on account of her own service, because of need or disability, why, for such service, should she not have the same as given others and the amount allowed to increase her present pension?

"In considering the claims of army nurses for pension, by some it has been placed on equality with that of widows and mothers of soldiers; but we claim that nurses should be pensioned on equal rating with the soldiers themselves, it being personal service as much as the soldier's, while the rating of the widows or mothers is for the services of other persons than themselves.

"General laws allow soldiers pensions from $8 to $72 per month, and we feel that by placing the rate for army nurses at $25 it is a very low average as between the rates for soldiers; and that for any woman who was old enough to do efficient army service during the war, she is by age alone now disabled for any real labor in life as much as the soldier, who would be allowed much more than a $25 pension; and further, if by necessity she is compelled now to ask a pension, she can not be made comfortable by a less amount than this for the few years of life now remaining to her.

"And this is but justice. This only grades pensions as the present laws allow for men, and for the same reasons; thus considering the widow or mother as heir of the one who filled responsible positions, bore great responsibility, entitled to more than the heir of a private soldier, however brave, who was responsible only for himself, and the same reasons as govern a grading of pay.

"The woman who takes greater responsibility also in her work, for others as well as herself, should be entitled to more pay and more pension than one who only fills her own place and is only responsible for it. A difference in rate has been made as to whether services rendered were 'in the field,' 'at the front,' or in the hospitals of Washington and vicinity. The hospitals of Fortress Monroe locality, Alexandria, Washington, Frederick, Cumberland, Baltimore, Annapolis, and others could be named as in the positive line of 'at the front' of hospital work, as were all which were near enough to the scene of carnage and slaughter so that the men were brought there to be saved in their blood-stained clothing as they fell, with most of the amputation yet to be made, with wounds undressed and often filled with maggots; clothing, bodies, and hair with filth and vermin—equally obnoxious to patient and nurse—and all to be made pure and well if skillful care and nursing could save them; and where did all the most loathsome and trying part fall but on the brave women who became willing nurses for these heroes, for such was every man who took his life in his hands to go forth to battle for what he believed right, to do his duty as a true, good citizen?

"It may be work in the hospitals so far north as Philadelphia, New York City, Boston, etc., could be classed as away from 'the front,' but even there the labor of nurses was arduous, the responsibility great; for we sent men from the hospitals of all points named, long before they ceased requiring skillful care, to make room 'at the front' for 'worse cases;' and, with the exceptions of at most a couple of days after battle—usually a few hours—the real 'long pull' and hard responsible work of doing, for both nurses and surgeons for our wounded, was transferred from 'the front' of fighting ground to 'the front' of hospital work—the general hospital—for every man who was expected to live, if at all dangerously sick or wounded, was taken thence as soon as possible, and there work was continuous, great, harrowing, in summer and winter, for all those years of war; many especially of our wounded were in hospitals for months before they could be even sent from these hospitals North. Consequently such difference in rating has been unjust and should be corrected. We are certain all army surgeons who served 'in the field' and 'in the hospitals' will say that, except for a short time after battle, in our hospitals was 'the front' of the care of our sick and wounded and the most arduous and continuous work of nurses done.

"For a soldier under orders, if his service or disability is 'in line of duty,' allow him a pension. It is not asked in what locality he was—he was sent where he was needed, and expected to be there, to do his duty. So were nurses. They, too, were under orders. Only such ask pensions as army nurses or should receive as such. There are many who will not ask a pension; and be assured no woman will unless she finds it an actual necessity to ask the relief of a pension, as let the many years prove that worthy women have waited before any did ask pension as army nurse. The same brave, heroic spirit of self-sacrifice will govern them now as led them to perform service as they did in the war; but now, when age with disabilities and necessity press upon them, should they be less honored because they ask? And shall they be refused?

"We appeal to every heart in your honorable committee; and let all hope, if obliged to ask, that their request shall meet with kind and generous response.

"Per order of the association.

"Very respectfully, yours,

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only rise to call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. I know it will pass, as all pension bills pass, and the worse they are the surer to succeed. There is no use objecting to it, because that will only postpone it for a day or two, and then it will come up and pass. I only call for the yeas and nays, because it has been announced here that whenever the yeas and nays are not called for it means that everybody is in favor of the bill. I am not in favor of it. After this report of course it will pass.

We have been giving from $12 to $25 a month, it seems, in all special cases where great service was done; but this is a bill which places on the pension-roll, at the rate of $25 a month, all women who were enrolled as army nurses or sanitary agents, and who rendered six months' service in hospitals, diet kitchens, or elsewhere. That is, any woman who was caught inside the lines of the Army, who was enrolled as an army nurse or sanitary agent, and cooked for six months, is to get a pension of $25 a month. The report says that——

This duty has been too long neglected, and it must ever be the cause of deep regret and a reflection upon the gallantry of this mighty people that twenty-seven years of continuous general pension legislation of great variety and involving immense sums of money have elapsed before these neglected benefactors of their country have received even the slight attempted recognition provided for in this bill.

The sum of $25 per month is little enough to pay to the few survivors of these more than Roman matrons, whose story is one of the chief glories of the Republic.

Of course the bill will pass after that. Where a woman has been caught anywhere, as was done all over the border States, and was taken in and enlisted as a nurse to get her away from her former master, and where she cooked for six months, she becomes a "Roman matron" and gets $25 a month. I do not think it is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not quite see on what principle this bill goes. In respect of the army nurses who got ill, or were in any wise disabled in their military service, I should be very glad indeed, if the law does not provide for them now, to make provision; but this bill gives a pension of $25 a month apparently for six months' service of women as army nurses who were honorably discharged and who went home in perfect health.

That is a new departure in the pension business. These ladies themselves, this association of nurses, if I understand the reading of their memorial, and I have read it again myself, do not ask for that. They only ask, apparently, and that would be right, to be put on the footing of soldiers who were disabled in the service; and if they were disabled in the service, or had come to extreme necessity, like our dependent soldiers, then it would be right that Congress should make provision for them. So say I; but this bill appears to go entirely beyond the memorial of the petitioners and entirely beyond anything in the way of pension laws that we have yet passed.

So far we have not provided for the men who served four or five years in the heat of battle and who came back whole, and who are still alive and well, although they had served four or five years continuously in the midst of perils and in prisons, etc. We have made no provision to do anything in the way of a pension for them; and yet this bill provides, what the ladies do not ask for, that if any woman has rendered service as an enrolled nurse in the Army for six months she shall have $25 a month, without any regard to her pecuniary circumstances, her state of health, or anything whatever.

As a friend of woman's rights I do not believe in making that invidious distinction. I can not see the ground upon which it stands, for these ladies, although women (and that is greatly to their credit), were not exposed to the dangers and to the hardships that the soldier himself was. No matter how wicked this rebellion was—we may exhaust the vocabulary about that—I do not believe there was ever a Confederate army or soldier or an officer who, having, contrary to the laws of Providence, beaten our boys on some battle-field and got into our hospitals where these women were, would do otherwise than treat them with the greatest tenderness and respect. It is impossible to think anything else. Therefore, so far as personal security goes, and personal safety, the women stand on a much safer ground than the man who held his musket on the lines and in the front and took the storm of battle.

So I can not see—perhaps my friend from New Hampshire can explain it to me—the principle, or the ground, or the justice upon which a service pension of $25, after a service of six months, shall be given to a well woman, under the present condition of things in regard to all the soldiers of the United States. If there is any explanation, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, this is a bill which was prepared by the National Relief Corps of Women, an association connected with the Grand Army of the Republic; and it was indorsed by the Grand Army of the Republic and sent here as the right kind of a bill for introduction. I introduced it, and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The army nurses form an association which represents about 150 members, of which Mrs. Harriet P. Dame is the president. After the bill had been acted upon by the Committee on Pensions they came before it desiring to be heard. They are the people who are particularly interested, and they are acting in co-operation with the Grand Army and with the Woman's National Relief Corps. They felt as though the amount of pension provided in the bill as it had been introduced was not so large as it ought to be, and upon a full hearing by the committee it was determined by the committee that the amount of $12 per month, specified in the bill, was less than ought to be given for the services which had been rendered, and considering the condition of these women, an amendment raising the sum to $25 a month was adopted by the committee, and it was adopted without a division in the committee, so far as I know. Thus it appears upon the Calendar with this increase beyond the terms contained in the original bill.

The report of the committee has been read, and I do not think its terms would be considered as extravagant or as going beyond the just statement of the services rendered by these women by any member of the committee who heard the testimony and the address of the representatives of the army nurses.

I will, however, read, in addition to what is contained in the report which has been read to the Senate, a letter which has been sent to me by one of the past commanders-in-chief of the Grand Army who has had occasion to give much attention to this matter. Before reading it I wish to say what possibly may not have been heard stated in the report by all the members of the Senate, owing to the confusion in the Chamber, that after careful examination and after correspondence for two years or more by the members of this association they testified before the committee that there was not an average of over six, at most eight, nurses who would be included within the terms of the bill—that is, the enrolled nurses—in each State throughout the country.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire if he desires to conclude the remarks he is making now; but as it seems this bill will necessitate considerable discussion, I propose to interpose an objection. I thought perhaps he would be willing that I should interpose the objection now.

Mr. BLAIR. I care to say nothing more but to read the statement, two pages only, of Paul Van Der Voort, past commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic:

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have read with great interest your report on bill 373, Senate file, in reference to pension for army nurses, and submit a few reasons why I think it should become a law. While commander-in-chief of Grand Army of the Republic in 1882-'83 I took special interest in hunting up these cases. I met them from Maine to California, finding in the last-named State Mother Bickerdyke almost penniless and too proud to ask aid of the old soldiers whom she is even yet striving to help. Many of these cases have been provided for by special acts, but there still remains a small number, not to exceed at the maximum one hundred and fifty in all the States, who should be cared for by the passage of this bill. These women were, many of them, middle-aged when they were in this grand service, it being the custom to detail only those of mature age.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has spoken five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope he will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He will proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. The letter continues:

In Nebraska we have two, Mrs. Painter and Mrs. Howe, both deserving cases. And I understand that there is an effort to cut down the amount asked for to $12 per month. If this is done it will be a base pittance that will no more than pay a servant to care for these aged and enfeebled women, whom I allude to because they represent the whole class. Take Clara Barton, for instance, known the world over, who wears on her tender breast the iron cross of Germany, bestowed by its late emperor, and a dozen other decorations given by the crowned heads of Europe. What has the Government of this country done to recognize her, save to give back a mere pittance of the large sum she disbursed during the war? She has never asked, and it has taken long and continued supplications to win such action. If she lived in Europe she would be a princess and the chosen companion of the greatest and best of all lands across the water.

I believe these women earned this recognization. The soldier suffered on battle-fields, in hospital and prison-pen, but I have always believed that woman suffered most. The nurses toiling on the field and in noisome hospital, the mother, wife, and sister picking lint and praying at home, trembling whenever they scanned a list of the dead, working in the field or slaving in the dim lamp-light with the needle until their aching fingers were worn to the bone. These are the class whose hearts were torn the most, who have fountains of tears yet unshed, and whom certain ones who legislate for this nation claim should be given no more than the meager pittance of $12 per month. Nearly all this saintly band are in the heaven above, where their reward is not stinted; and I trust the shattered band on earth will be blessed by the passage of this act.

Very respectfully, PAUL VAN DER VOORT,
Past Commander-in-Chief Grand Army of the Republic, and National Honorary Member Woman's Relief Corps.

Mr. BECK. The bill provides that "all women regularly enrolled" who served as army nurses for six months in hospitals, diet kitchens, etc., shall receive a pension of $25 a month. Can the Senator from New Hampshire tell me where that enrollment is to be found? There ought to be no guessing about it. We ought to know precisely how many were enrolled.

Mr. BLAIR. That enrollment I suppose to be in the War Department. There has been considerable effort made to obtain it. There has been effort made by the army nurses' organization to obtain it. The Secretary of War says it would necessitate the overhauling of his records very generally, and until applications by individuals are made it hardly seemed worth while to go through the labor. But the parties interested have been corresponding throughout every State in the Union and making great effort to ascertain the number of enrolled nurses, which is what the bill embraces, now living in the country, and, as stated in the report of the committee, the number does not exceed, so far as they can be ascertained, over six or eight in each State. The late commander of the Grand Army states that, after careful investigation by himself for a long time, there are not over one hundred and fifty in the whole country; he can not tell exactly.

Mr. BECK. This is a fact which can be ascertained accurately——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to remind the Senator from Kentucky that he has spoken once on this subject.

Mr. BECK. And I rise now only for the purpose of saying that I shall object to the further consideration of this bill, and I hope that the Committee on Pensions will at least do the Senate the justice to call upon the Secretary of War for information as to the number enrolled, so that we can come within at least a million or two million dollars of what we shall have to pay under the bill. That information can be had, and we do not have to rely upon army nurses or upon Grand Armies of the Republic. The rolls show it. If we are going to give $25 a month to every woman, white or black, who cooked for six months, well off or ill off, hurt or not, we ought at least to know how many we are going to give it to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been passed over under objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that unanimous consent be given to the chairman of the committee to be heard.

Mr. TELLER. I object to any discussion on a bill that is not before the Senate. We have had two speeches since this bill went out of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next order of business will be stated.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose the Senator from Kentucky has no objection to the nurses' pension bill retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. No. All I desire is to get from the Secretary of War the number enrolled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

ADMINISTRATRIX OF GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

The bill (S. 879) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of George W. Lawrence was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPOONER. Let that be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SPOONER subsequently said: I ask now to proceed with Senate bill 879, which was passed over.

The bill (S. 879) for the relief of the administratrix of George W. Lawrence was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the amendment which I send to the desk; and I wish to say that the amendment which I send to the desk is precisely the McKay bill as it passed the House of Representatives and passed the Senate yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the claims of George W. Lawrence for further compensation for the construction of the United States vessels Agawam, Pontoosuc, and Wassuc may be submitted by his legal representatives within six months after the passage of this act to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for building the United States vessels Agawam, Pontoosuc, and Wassuc in the completion of the same, by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided, Such additional cost in completing the same and such changes and alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the completion of the work, were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractor and the Government for specific alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, Such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessel shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any of such changes caused less work and expense to the contractor than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amount thereof be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimant: And provided further, That the receipts or vouchers heretofore signed by the contractors for the building of said vessels shall be considered by said court as prima facie evidence of settlement of and payment for the claims now made, but which vouchers and receipts shall be susceptible of explanation by proofs, showing the net indebtedness of the Government, and the circumstances under which the same were given.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK H. WINSTON, JR.

The bill (S. 212) for the relief of Patrick H. Winston, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Patrick H. Winston, jr., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750, for legal services rendered by him in defense of Tom Hill, a captain of the Indian police of the Nez Percé agency, Idaho Territory, charged with the killing of the Indian Nine Pipes, said services having been rendered by the request of Mr. Charles Monteith, United States agent at the Nez Percé reservation, and of Hon. Norman Buck, judge of the first judicial district of Idaho Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 325) granting to the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company the right of way through the Crow Indian reservation was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DIVISION OF GREAT SIOUX RESERVATION

The bill (S. 1) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in Dakota, into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 7315, on the same subject-matter, now on our Calendar as Order of Business 724, be substituted for consideration instead of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 724 be considered in lieu of Order of Business 282, being on the same subject. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I think it will save time if the amendments suggested by the Committee on Indian Affairs be considered as the bill is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into separate smaller reservations, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, after the word "thence," to strike out "easterly" and insert "due east;" in line 11, after the words "thence up," to strike out "the Pas" and insert "Pass;" so as to read:

That the following tract of land, being a part of the Great reservation of the Sioux Nation, in the Territory of Dakota, is hereby set apart for a permanent reservation for the Indians receiving rations and annuities at the Pine Ridge agency, in the Territory of Dakota, namely: Beginning at the intersection of the one hundred and third meridian of longitude with the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska; thence north along said meridian to the South Fork of Cheyenne River, and down said stream to the mouth of Battle Creek; thence due east to White River; thence down White River to the mouth of Pass Creek, on White River; thence up Pass Creek southerly to the source of its principal branch; thence due south to said north line of the State of Nebraska; thence west on said north line to the place of beginning.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 11, after the words "range 71, and," to insert "all except sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of;" and in line 13, after the words "range seventy," to strike out "except sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 12;" so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the following tract of land, being a part of the Great reservation of the Sioux Nation, in the Territory of Dakota, is hereby set apart for a permanent reservation for the Indians receiving rations and annuities at the Crow Creek agency, in said Territory of Dakota, namely: The whole of township 106, range 70; township 107, range 71; township 108, range 71; township 108, range 72; township 109, range 72, and the south half of township 109, range 71, and all except sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of township 107, range 70, and such parts as lie on the east or left bank of the Missouri River, of the following townships.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 7, to add the following proviso:

Provided further, That if there shall not be sufficient land in said Moody County for allotments to all of said Flandreau band, any member of said band not having made a location may make the same on any land opened to settlement under this act in the same manner as is provided for allotments on the reservations herein created.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 19, after the word "Indians," to strike out "and certificates;" so as to read:

That if any one entitled to an allotment shall fail to make a selection within five years after the President shall direct that allotments may be made on a particular reservation, the Secretary of the Interior may direct the agent of such tribe or band, if such there be, and if there be no agent, then a special agent appointed for that purpose, to make a selection for such Indian, which selection shall be allotted as in cases where selections are made by the Indians, and patents shall issue in like manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 3, after the word "cause," to strike out "certificates" and insert "patents;" in line 4, after the word "which," to strike out "certificates" and insert "patents;" in line 6, after the word "years," to strike out "or for a longer period, in the discretion of the President of the United States;" and in line 10, after the word "decease," to strike out "to" and insert "of;" so as to read:

SEC. 11. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the lands thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs, as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever, and patents shall issue accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 15, after the word "accordingly," to insert:

Provided, That the President of the United States may in any case, in his discretion, extend the period by a term not exceeding ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 24, after the word "after," to strike out "certificates or;" and in line 26, before the word "patents," to strike out "certificates and;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the law of descent and partition in force in the State or Territory where the lands may be situated shall apply thereto after patents therefor have been executed and delivered. Each of the patents aforesaid shall be recorded in the General Land Office and afterward delivered, free of charge, to the allottee entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section, after section 11, the following:

SEC. 12. That at any time after lands have been allotted to all the Indians of any tribe as herein provided, or sooner, if in the opinion of the President it shall be for the best interests of said tribe, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with such Indian tribe for the purchase and release by said tribe, in conformity with the treaty or statute under which such reservation is held, of such portions of its reservation not allotted as such tribe shall, from time to time, consent to sell on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress; and the form and manner of executing such release shall also be prescribed by Congress: Provided, however, That all lands adapted to agriculture, with or without irrigation, so sold or released to the United States by any Indian tribe shall be held by the United States for the sole purpose of securing homes to actual settlers, and shall be disposed of by the United States to actual and bona fide settlers only in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, on such terms as Congress shall prescribe, subject to grants which Congress may make in aid of education: And provided further, That no patents shall issue therefor except to the person so taking the same as and for a homestead, or his heirs, and after the expiration of five years' occupancy thereof as such homestead; and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same, or lien thereon, created prior to the date of such patent, shall be null and void. And the sums agreed to be paid by the United States as purchase-money for any portion of any such reservation shall be held in the Treasury of the United States for the sole use of the tribe or tribes of Indians to whom such reservation belonged; and the same, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum, shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for the education and civilization of such tribe or tribes of Indians or the members thereof. The patents aforesaid shall be recorded in the General Land Office, and afterward delivered, free of charge, to the allottee entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [12] 13, line 14, after the word "provided," to strike out the words "including American Island, Farm Island, and Niobrara Island;" in line 28, after the word "named," to strike out the words:

When the allotment of the lands under the provisions of this act to the members of the Ponca tribe of Indians shall have been made, the President shall, in pursuance of the act approved March 28, 1882, entitled "An act to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska," declare that the Indian title is extinguished to all the lands not allotted to said tribe hereunder and described in said act, and thereupon all of said lands not allotted to said Poncas, added to Nebraska by the act aforesaid, shall be open to settlement as provided in section 20 of this act.

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

When the allotments to the Ponca tribe of Indians and to such other Indians as allotments are provided for by this act shall have been made upon that portion of said reservation which is described in the act entitled "An act to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska," approved March 28, 1882, the President shall, in pursuance of said act, declare that the Indian title is extinguished to all lands described in said act not so allotted hereunder, and thereupon all of said land not so allotted and included in said act of March 28, 1882, shall be open to settlement, as provided in this act: Provided, That the allotments to Ponca and other Indians authorized by this act to be made upon the land described in the said act entitled "An act to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska," shall be made within six months from the time this act shall take effect.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That any Indian receiving and entitled to rations and annuities at either of the agencies mentioned in this act at the time the same shall take effect, but residing upon any portion of said Great Sioux reservation not included in either of the separate reservations herein established, may, at his option, within one year from the time when this act shall take effect, and within one year after he has been notified of his said right of option in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct by recording his election with the proper agent at the agency to which he belongs, have the allotment to which he would be otherwise entitled on one of said separate reservations upon the land where such Indian may then reside, such allotment in all other respects to conform to the allotments hereinbefore provided. Each member of the Ponca tribe of Indians now occupying a part of the old Ponca reservation, within the limits of the said Great Sioux reservation, shall be entitled to allotments upon said old Ponca reservation as follows: To each head of a family, one-quarter of a section; to each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and to each other person under eighteen years of age now living, one-sixteenth of a section, with title thereto and rights under the same in all other respects conforming to this act. And said Poncas shall be entitled to all other benefits under this act in the same manner and with the same conditions as if they were a part of the Sioux Nation receiving rations at one of the agencies herein named. When the allotments to the Ponca tribe of Indians and to such other Indians as allotments are provided for by this act shall have been made upon that portion of said reservation which is described in the act entitled "An act to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska," approved March 28, 1882, the President shall, in pursuance of said act, declare that the Indian title is extinguished to all lands described in said act not so allotted hereunder, and thereupon all of said land not so allotted and included in said act of March 28, 1882, shall be open to settlement, as provided in this act: Provided, That the allotments to Ponca and other Indians authorized by this act to be made upon the land described in the said act entitled "An act to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska," shall be made within six months from the time this act shall take effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [13] 14, line 7, after the word "any," to insert the word "such;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 14. That in cases where the use of water for irrigation is necessary to render the lands within any Indian reservation created by this act available for agricultural purposes, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to secure a just and equal distribution thereof among the Indians residing upon any such Indian reservation created by this act; and no other appropriation or grant of water by any riparian proprietor shall be authorized or permitted to the damage of any other riparian proprietor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [14] 15, line 6, after the word "within," to insert the words "or without;" so as to read:

SEC. 15. That if any Indian has, under and in conformity with the provisions of the treaty with the Great Sioux Nation concluded April 29, 1868, and proclaimed by the President February 24, 1869, or any existing law, taken allotments of land within or without the limits of any of the separate reservations established by this act, such allotments are hereby ratified and made and made valid, and such Indian is entitled to a patent therefor in conformity with the provisions of said treaty and existing law and of the provisions of this act in relation to patents for individual allotments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 8 the Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to a repetition of the words "and made." The repetition will be stricken out, if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section [15] 16, line 11, after the word "created," to insert the words:

And shall be held to confirm in the Indians entitled to receive rations at each of said separate reservations, respectively, to their separate and exclusive use and benefit, all the title and interest of every name and nature secured therein to the different bands of the Sioux Nation by said treaty of April 29, 1868.

In line 17, to strike out the word "extinguishment" and insert "release;" in line 19, after the word "act," to insert the words "which title is hereby confirmed;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That the acceptance of this act by the Indians in manner and form as required by the said treaty concluded between the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians and the United States April 29, 1868, and proclaimed by the President February 24, 1869, as hereinafter provided, shall be taken and held to be a release of all title on the part of the Indians receiving rations and annuities on each of the said separate reservations to the lands described in each of the other separate reservations so created, and shall be held to confirm in the Indians entitled to receive rations at each of said separate reservations, respectively, to their separate and exclusive use and benefit, all the title and interest of every name and nature secured therein to the different bands of the Sioux Nation by said treaty of April 29, 1868. This release shall not affect the title of any individual Indian to his separate allotment on land not included in any of said separate reservations provided for in this act, which title is hereby confirmed, nor any agreement heretofore made with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company or the Dakota Central Railroad Company for a right of way through said reservation; and for any lands acquired by any such agreement to be used in connection therewith, except as hereinafter provided; but the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company and the Dakota Central Railroad Company shall, respectively, have the right to take and use, prior to any white person and to any corporation, the right of way provided for in said agreements, with not to exceed 20 acres of land, in addition to the right of way, for stations for every 10 miles of road; and said companies shall also, respectively, have the right to take and use for right of way, side-track, depot, and station privileges, machine-shop, freight-house, round-house, and yard facilities, prior to any white person and to any corporation or association, so much of the two separate sections of land embraced in said agreements; also, the former company so much of the 188 acres, and the latter company so much of the 75 acres, on the east side of the Missouri River, likewise embraced in said agreements, as the Secretary of the Interior shall decide to be absolutely necessary upon each side of said river for approaches to the bridge of each of said companies to be constructed across the river, for right of way, side-track, depot, and station privileges, machine-shop, freight-house, round-house, and yard facilities, and no more: Provided, That the said railway companies shall have made the payments according to the terms of said agreements for each mile of right of way and each acre of land for railway purposes which said companies take and use under the provisions of this act, and shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior to that effect: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be sold or leased by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the Government: And provided further, That said payments shall be made and said conditions performed within six months after the passage of this act. And unless said roads shall be constructed over said lands and right of way within three years from the passage and approval of this act, all of said lands granted and right of way shall be forfeited and revert to the Government and be subject to the other provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. The committee suggest an amendment in the forty-second line, on the seventeenth page, immediately after the word "to" to insert:

Have been agreed upon and paid for by said railroads, or to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In section [15] 16, in line 42, after the word "to" it is proposed to insert:

Have been agreed upon and paid for by said railroads, or to.

So as to read:

As the Secretary of the Interior shall decide to have been agreed upon and paid for by said railroads, or to be absolutely necessary upon each side of said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. After the word "be," in the same line, I move to strike out "absolutely" and insert "reasonably;" so as to read:

As the Secretary of the Interior shall decide to have been agreed upon and paid for by said railroads, or to be reasonably necessary, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the close of section 16.

Mr. DAWES. The committee suggest an amendment, commencing on the fifty-second line, to strike out, commencing with the words "Provided further," in line 52, down to and including the word "and," in line 58, and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section [15] 16 it is proposed to strike out:

Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be sold or leased by the company, and they shall not be used, except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the Government.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be sold or conveyed except by way of sale or mortgage of the railway itself, nor shall any of said lands be used directly or indirectly for town-site purposes, it being the intent hereof that such lands shall be held for general railway uses and purposes only, including stock-yards, warehouses, elevators, terminal and other facilities; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any railroad company from building upon such lands houses for the accommodation or residence of its employés or depot grounds contiguous to its tracks or warehouses for elevator purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In the same section, line 60, after the word "after," I move to strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert "this act shall take effect;" so as to read:

That said payments shall be made and said conditions performed within six months after this act shall take effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In the same section, line 62, after the word "within," I move to strike out "three years from the passage and approval of this act" and insert the words "four years from the date when this act shall take effect;" so as to read:

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section [16] 17, line 18, after the word "one," to strike out "yoke" and insert "pair;" and in the same line, after the word "oxen," to insert "with yoke and chain;" so as to read:

Provided, That each head of family or single person over the age of eighteen years, who shall have or may hereafter take his or her allotment of land in severalty, shall be provided with two milch cows, one pair of oxen, with yoke and chain, one plow, one wagon, one harrow, one hoe, one ax, and one pitchfork, all suitable to the work they may have to do, and also $20 in cash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 19, as follows:

SEC. 19. That in order to provide for a uniform system of public schools for the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint some competent person friendly to the education of the Indians to act as superintendent of education of the Sioux Indians located on the portions of the Great Sioux reservation reserved as herein provided, at such salary as the Secretary of the Interior may fix, not exceeding $2,500 per annum, to be paid out of the interest of the permanent fund mentioned in this act, and said superintendent, by and under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, shall cause to be erected not less than thirty school-houses, and more, if found necessary, on the different reservations, at such points as the superintendent shall think for the best interest of the Indians, but at such distance only as will enable as many as possible attending schools to return home nights, as white children do attending district schools: And provided, That any white children residing in the neighborhood are privileged to attend the said school on such terms as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may prescribe.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Colorado proposes to amend the section just read.

Mr. TELLER. The committee, I understand, propose to strike out the whole section. I submit that it should stand, inserting in line 11, after the words "Indian Affairs"——

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator would send up the section as he proposes to make it read, that would be better.

Mr. TELLER. I move to insert instead of the words "Commissioner of Indian Affairs," in line 11, the words "Secretary of the Interior."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado, the Chair understands, proposes to amend the part proposed to be stricken out. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 19, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In line 13 I move to strike out the words "the superintendent" and insert "he;" so as to read:

At such points as he shall think for the best interest of the Indians—

Referring to the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In line 18 I move to strike out the word "privileged" and insert "entitled;" and in line 19 to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

And provided, That any white children residing in the neighborhood are entitled to attend the said school on such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Now I move to strike out all of the section as now amended down to the word "the," in line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "the," in line 10, as follows:

That in order to provide for a uniform system of public schools for the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint some competent person friendly to the education of the Indians to act as superintendent of education of the Sioux Indians located on the portions of the Great Sioux reservation reserved as herein provided, at such salary as the Secretary of the Interior may fix, not exceeding $2,500 per annum, to be paid out of the interest of the permanent fund mentioned in this act, and said superintendent, by and under the direction of the.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be erected not less than thirty school-houses, and more, if found necessary, on the different reservations, at such points as he shall think for the best interest of the Indians, but at such distance only as will enable as many as possible attending schools to return home nights, as white children do attending district schools: And provided, That any white children residing in the neighborhood are entitled to attend the said school on such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the proposed amendment to strike out the section as amended.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the section will now remain.

Mr. TELLER. The committee desire it to stand as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on agreeing to the amendment to strike out.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 20, line 41, after "United States," to insert "to be disposed of by future legislation only;" so as to read:

Provided further, That said city of Chamberlain shall formally accept the same within one year from the passage of this act, upon the express condition that the same shall be preserved and used for all time entire as a public park, and for no other purpose, to which all persons shall have free access; and said city shall have authority to adopt all proper rules and regulations for the improvement and care of said park; and upon the failure of any of said conditions the said island shall revert to the United States, to be disposed of by future legislation only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, line 49, after the word "other," to strike out "purposes" and insert "purpose;" and in line 54, after the words "United States," to insert "to be disposed of by future legislation only;" so as to read:

Provided further, That said city of Pierre shall formally accept the same within one year from the passage of this act, upon the express condition that the same shall be preserved and used for all time entire as a public park, and for no other purpose, to which all persons shall have free access; and said city shall have authority to adopt all proper rules and regulations for the improvement and care of said park; and upon the failure of any of said conditions the said island shall revert to the United States, to be disposed of by future legislation only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, line 66, after "United States," to insert "to be disposed of by future legislation only;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the said city of Niobrara shall formally accept the same within one year from the passage of this act, upon the express condition that the same shall be preserved and used for all time entire as a public park, and for no other purpose, to which all persons shall have free access; and said city shall have authority to adopt all proper rules and regulations for the improvement and care of said park; and upon the failure of any of said conditions the said island shall revert to the United States, to be disposed of by future legislation only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following proviso to section 20:

And provided further, That if any full or mixed blood Indian of the Sioux Nation shall have located upon Farm Island, American Island, or Niobrara Island before the date of the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, within three months from the time this act shall have taken effect, to cause all improvements made by any such Indian so located upon either of said islands, and all damage that may accrue to him by a removal therefrom, to be appraised, and upon the payment of the sum so determined, within six months after notice thereof, by the city to which the island is herein donated, to such Indian, said Indian shall be required to remove from said island, and shall be entitled to select instead of such location his allotment according to the provisions of this act upon any of the reservations herein established, or upon any land opened to settlement by this act not already located upon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, line 1, after the word "money," to strike out "arising" and insert "accruing;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 21. That all money accruing from the disposal of lands in conformity with the foregoing section shall, after deducting the necessary expenses attending such disposition thereof, be paid into the Treasury of the United States and be applied solely as follows: First, to the reimbursement of the United States for all necessary actual expenditures contemplated and provided for under the provisions of this act, and the creation of the permanent fund hereinbefore provided; and after such reimbursement to the increase of said permanent fund for the purposes hereinbefore provided.

The reading of the bill was resumed at section 22.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to correct some errors in this section. In line 4, the words "homestead filing" should be stricken out and "settlement" inserted. There were no homestead filings made. They were only settlements, and the filings were never executed. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In line 12 there should be, after the word "located," the words "or attempted to locate" inserted. I move to insert them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 22, line 11, after the word "being," to insert "otherwise;" in line 16, after the words "made by," to strike out "section 24 of;" and in line 18, after the word "section," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-one;" so as to read:

And who, being otherwise legally entitled to make such entries, located or attempted to locate thereon homestead, pre-emption, or town-site claims, by actual settlement and improvement of any portion of such lands, shall, for a period of ninety days after the proclamation of the President required to be made by this act, have a right to re-enter upon said claims and procure title thereto under the provisions of section 21 of this act, and complete the same as required therein, and their said claims shall, for such time, have a preference over later entries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, line 6, after the date "1868," to strike out the words "Provided, That" and insert "which;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof and consent thereto by the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in manner and form prescribed by the twelfth article of the said treaty between the United States and said Indians, concluded April 29, 1868, which said acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation thereof by the President of the United States, upon satisfactory proof presented to him that the same has been obtained in the manner and form required by said twelfth article of said treaty, which proof shall be presented to him within one year from the passage of this act; and upon failure of such proof and proclamation this act becomes of no effect, and null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 24, as follows:

SEC. 24. That sections 16 and 36 in each and every township to which the Indian title is extinguished by the provisions of this act, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, is reserved for the use and benefit of the public schools, and said sections, whether surveyed or not, shall not be subject to disposal under the provisions of this act or of any of the laws in relation to the disposal of public lands.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 24. That sections 16 and 36 of each township of the lands opened to settlement under the provisions of this act, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, are hereby reserved for the use and benefit of the public schools as provided by the act organizing the Territory of Dakota, and whether surveyed or unsurveyed said sections shall not be subject to claim, settlement, or entry under the provisions of this act or any of the land laws of the United States: Provided, however, That the United States shall pay to said Indians, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of 50 cents per acre for all lands reserved under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 25, line 6, after the word "section," to strike out "twenty-three" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 25. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,000, which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians to this act provided in section 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I move to amend section 7 by striking out all after the word "take," at the end of line 21, down to and including the word "act," in line 27, and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, after the word "take," in line 21, it is proposed to strike out as follows:

In Moody County, in said Dakota, the same allotments authorized by existing treaties and this act on any part of said reservation; and all allotments heretofore made to members of said band in said county are hereby ratified and confirmed, subject to the limitations and conditions of such treaties and this act.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Allotments on the Great Sioux reservation, or in lieu thereof, shall be paid at the rate of 50 cents per acre for the land to which they would be entitled, which shall be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to purchase land in the Sisseton reservation or elsewhere.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator leave in the italics?

Mr. CHASE. They, of course, must be stricken out, and I shall follow this amendment with that.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to object to the amendment, except to state the reasons why the committee did not put it in. The committee have had a good deal of trouble with these Flandreau Indians. If the plan which the Senator suggests is a good one, I do not object to it; and I shall not object to the adoption of his amendment if it is to result in a committee of conference to see if something can not be provided. The truth is that the Flandreau Indians belong to the Yankton tribe. They got tired of staying with the Yanktons, and they went there of their own accord to Moody County, Dakota, and in that county, under the treaty which allowed allotments, they took allotments of land.

Some of the white friends of these Indians succeeded in persuading them, very much as Mark Twain's man persuaded the man to buy his mule, to sell their land. A good many of them have sold out there and the others are tired of staying there; and now they want the Government of the United States to pay them 50 cents an acre for that land, just what is the price fixed for the land that is open to settlement, and let them take that.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator will excuse me. He is under a mistaken impression as to the land they took up. They took up land on the public domain under the homestead law.

Mr. DAWES. They have parted with the land. Whether they took it up under the treaty or not, the Senator is more familiar with than myself. Now they want the Government of the United States to pay them 50 cents an acre for that land and let them take the money and go over to the Sisseton reservation to buy some land there. Whether the Sissetons want them or not does not appear. The committee propose, instead of that, to allow them to locate under this bill on any part of this reservation which is open to settlement. Which is best for the interest of those Indians I do not know. I will not object to the Senator's amendment, because it will go to a committee of conference, and what is best to be done will there be finally settled.

Mr. CHACE. Very well; if the Senator accepts the amendment I shall not detain the Senate by saying anything; but I think all he says could be very well answered. I do not care, however, to take up the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHACE. I move now to strike out the italics, commencing with the word "provided," in line 30 down to line 35. It is really a part of the other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part proposed to be stricken out now has been inserted by action of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. By unanimous consent it can be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the amendment can be agreed to as proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. It will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, at the end of section 7, the following proviso:

Provided further, That if there shall not be sufficient land in said Moody

County for allotments to all of said Flandreau band, any member of said band not having made a location may make the same on any land opened to settlement under this act in the same manner as is provided for allotments on the reservations herein created.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder."

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

Mr. MANDERSON. The amendments to this bill are so numerous and radical that I move that 100 copies of the bill be printed as amended for the use of the Senate, the print to show the House bill with the Senate amendments in italics.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The bill (S. 1) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in Dakota, into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, will be indefinitely postponed.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. CALL. I move that an order be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein, as I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida, the Chair understands, moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed yesterday, and moves that the bill be recalled from the House of Representatives.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Florida be kind enough to explain what he desires?

Mr. CALL. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. VOORHEES. The matter has been fully considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill to which the Senator from Florida refers was passed by the Senate yesterday. The motion to reconsider will be entered, and a message sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill.

CREDITORS OF POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

The bill (S. 136) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DANIEL. This bill has heretofore passed the Senate and is again reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs; but there is a House bill on the same subject which ought to be considered instead of this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator the number of the House bill?

Mr. DANIEL. I will get it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be informally passed over for the present.

SALE OF FORT OMAHA.

The bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREDITORS OF POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask leave to recur to the bill just now informally passed by, and I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report the bill (H. R. 4487) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors of the Pottawatomie Indians out of the funds of said Indians. I ask that this be considered in place of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks that the bill which he has just reported, being identical with Senate bill 136, may be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment, out of moneys appropriated for the Pottawatomie Indians by the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies," etc., a sum not exceeding $3,175, being 10 per cent. of the amount or proportion of the appropriation due the Citizens' band of Pottawatomie Indians, to E. John Ellis, for professional service rendered that band in the collection of the claim. The Secretary of the Interior is first to determine that the services were rendered to the Indians by Ellis, and were contracted for in good faith by persons authorized to represent the Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 136) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors will be indefinitely postponed.

FREEDOM OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstructions of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury was announced as next in order.

Mr. STEWART. I think that will lead to discussion. It requires explanation. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. STEWART subsequently withdrew his objection, and the bill was restored to its place on the Calendar.

NEW YORK HARBOR.

The bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, and making other provisions in connection therewith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment, was in section 1, line 8, after the word "waters," to insert "within the limits which shall be prescribed by the supervisor of the harbor;" so as to make the section read:

That the placing, discharging, or depositing, by any process or in any manner, of refuse, dirt, ashes, cinders, mud, sand, dredgings, sludge, acid, or any other matter of any kind, other than that flowing from streets, sewers, and passing therefrom in a liquid state, in the tidal waters of the harbor of New York, or its adjacent or tributary waters, within the limits which shall be prescribed by the supervisor of the harbor, is hereby strictly forbidden, and every such act is made a misdemeanor, and every person engaged in or who shall aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of this section shall, upon conviction, be punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, such fine to be not less than $250 nor more than $2,500, and the imprisonment to be not less than thirty days nor more than one year, either or both united, as the judge before whom conviction is obtained shall decide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, after the words "by the," to strike out "board of commissioners" and insert "supervisor;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any and every master and engineer, or person or persons acting in such capacity, respectively, on board of any boat or vessel, who shall knowingly engage in towing any scow, boat, or vessel loaded with any such prohibited matter to any point or place of deposit, or discharge in the waters of the harbor of New York, or to any point or place elsewhere than within the limits defined and permitted by the supervisor of the harbor hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and shall, upon conviction, be punishable as hereinbefore provided for offenses in violation of section 1 of this act, and shall also have his license revoked or suspended for a term to be fixed by the judge before whom tried and convicted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

This memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia respectfully represents—

That the board considers the General Government should early enact such legislation as will suppress dishonest undervaluations of goods imported into this country, and also provide for the simplification of appraisements and guard against and prevent the unnecessary delays attending the final adjustment of duties.

That it finds the provisions of the amendments reported by Mr. ALLISON to Senate bill No. 977 wise and tending to secure better administration and the suppression of frauds and irregularities now complained of.

Therefore your memorialist, the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, urges your honorable bodies to pass Senate bill No. 977, with the amendments reported by Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance.

And your memorialist will ever pray, etc.

[SEAL.] FRED. FRALEY,
President of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia.

Attest: W. P. TUCKER, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF TRADE, Philadelphia, March 20, 1888.

REVISION OF TARIFF.

Mr. RANDALL. I also ask unanimous consent to present resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., concerning the revision of the tariff. I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

Preamble and resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, held on the evening of March 19, 1888.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas in response to the President's message Congress has now under discussion the formulation of a tariff upon imports and the extension of the free-list of imports; and

Whereas many millions of our fellow-citizens are engaged in the production of manufactures, and in the home commerce arising from such manufactures, employing thousands of millions of dollars, which are interests so large and so varied that they permeate every business establishment and dwelling in the land; and

Whereas no laws should be passed which would injure or destroy the manufactures of this country, and what is done should be done speedily to prevent the stagnation now fully apparent, even from the pending discussion: Therefore,

Resolved, That while the revision of the tariff and the laws governing the tariff may have become necessary, no law should be passed which would tend to cripple, break up, or destroy the home industries and home markets of the United States.

Resolved, That the extension of the free-list of imports into the United States should be only of such character as will aid the further development of manufactures, and that no free importation of any article should be allowed that will militate against any of the industries of the country.

Resolved, That to destroy or even to seriously impair the manufacturing interests of the United States means the deprivation of employment or the reduction of the wages of millions now engaged in these industries to the low standard of the foreign wage-worker.

Resolved, That in accordance with these principles the Board of Trade expresses its belief that the Mills tariff bill, now before the Committee of Ways and Means, if it should become a law, would prove injurious to many important and long-established industries of the country, and that Congress be requested not to pass the bill.

[SEAL.] FRED. FRALEY,
President of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia.

Attest: W. P. TUCKER, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF TRADE, Philadelphia, March 20, 1888.

Add the following to section 10:

"That in order to determine what lands may lawfully be selected, certified, or patented under grants made by Congress to each and every of the several land-grant railroads of the United States, and to which patent has not heretofore issued, such railroad company or corporation shall, by its agent thereto authorized in writing, file with the register and receiver of the land office in which such land is situated an affidavit that the land claimed or selected and each legal subdivision thereof is non-mineral in character as contemplated by the grant, and that the affiant has made a personal inspection of said land; and thereupon the register and receiver of the land office in which said land is situated shall cause to be published in a newspaper of general circulation, published nearest the land so claimed or selected, for four successive weeks a notice that such affidavit has been filed, and at any time within thirty days thereafter any citizen of the State or Territory within which said land is situated may deny the allegation of non-mineral in said affidavit upon oath; and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had and obtain as in other contested cases, including the right of appeal by either party, but the burden of proving the non-mineral character of the land shall be upon the railroad company; and in all such contests it shall be sufficient to reject the claim or selection of any railroad company if it appears from the proof that the land contains lodes of mineral-bearing matter, which does not pass by the grant, whether it has been worked or not, or whether it will pay or not to work at the time of the contest. As between the railroad company and the Government any and all land that bears mineral which does not pass by the grant, or gold in placer form, in such appreciable quantities as to render it in any sense valuable so as to be likely to be sought out for its mineral qualities, shall be considered within the exception made by Congress, and shall be considered mineral lands."

Amend by adding the following sections to the bill:

"SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to have the lands embraced within abandoned military reservations regularly surveyed by an extension of the public surveys thereon.

"SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause any improvements, buildings, building materials, and other property which may be situated upon such lands, not heretofore sold by the United States authorities, to be appraised by three competent and disinterested men, to be appointed by him, who shall, after each having been duly sworn to impartially and faithfully execute the trust imposed in him, appraise the said improvements, buildings, building materials, and other property situate thereon, and report their proceedings to the Secretary of the Interior for his action thereon; and thereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the same to be advertised for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, in at least two newspapers of general circulation published in the State or Territory where said reservation is situated for four successive weeks, giving the time and place of said sale. Any sale of improvements made under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. —. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

R. G. HUSTON & CO.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BLAND. I think the bill ought to be explained. Or let the report be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] demanded the regular order if time was to be consumed by the reading of the report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Senate committee is not here.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. This bill has been several times before both Houses of Congress. It was passed by the Senate in the last Congress; was reported to the House, and a favorable report has been made by the House Committee on Claims in the present Congress. The measure has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers. The claim was also examined by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury and by him fully approved.

These parties asked $8,000 for their work. The amount was cut down to $7,572.48. The work was for improvements on the levees of the Mississippi River. It had to be done in September, 1882. There was some delay in giving notice to the parties. They got to work; in February high floods came, and the supervising officers of the Engineer Department directed them, in order to save certain other works, to lay aside this work and protect what had already been done. It is for compensation for this extra work that this bill is in part offered. If gentlemen desire it, the report of the House committee, which gives a full statement of the case, can be read.

Mr. BLAND. Let the report be read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay.

Also, that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California;

A bill (S. 70) to provide for warehousing fruit brandy;

A bill (S. 396) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased;

A bill (S. 1139) for the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River;

A bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein; and

A bill (S. 1328) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of Executive Document No. 51, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 15,000 additional copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1887.

The SPEAKER. The report is being read upon the demand of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have heard enough of the report to convince me that the bill is probably worthy of consideration, and I shall not object to the House considering it. I wish, however, to ask a question on a point which is not covered by the report so far as I have heard it read. Is this an appropriation to pay the contractors for material lost on account of the flood?

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. Not at all. It is not for material, but for work done.

Mr. BLAND. Extra work?

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. To pay for extra work in a great emergency, and, in a great measure, to protect work already done.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Wilson the sum of $42.65, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on account of the robbing of the mail and the loss of registered letters for that sum, the robber being subsequently arrested, tried, and convicted.

CLAIMS UNDER EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of business of the Committee on Labor, under the resolution adopted yesterday.

Mr. TARSNEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill No. 1539, providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HATCH in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1539.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the unfinished business under the special order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, has there been any limitation of time fixed for the debate on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The House has not fixed any limit to the debate. The general debate on the bill is proceeding.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, in contrast with the provisions of this first section, I ask attention to an amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute for that section and to have it pending:

That all laborers of, and persons heretofore employed by or in behalf of the Government of the United States at per diem compensation, since the 25th of June, 1868, who have been required to perform labor for more than eight hours per day by the superintendent or other person in charge of the work upon which he was engaged, against the protest of such laborer and in violation of his contract, shall be entitled to have and recover of the Government of the United States extra compensation for the additional time so employed at the same per diem at which he was employed for each eight hours of extra labor so performed by him.

Some days ago it was alleged on both sides of the House that the Public Printer and the President of the United States were violators of the eight-hour law. I invited the attention of the House at that time to the question by making inquiry among gentlemen what law or what interpretation of law prohibited any officer of the Government from employing any person in excess of eight hours per day. I was referred to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I regret exceedingly I can not read in full, but I will read enough of it to show the House that there is not now and never has been, so far as I have any information, any law which prohibits any citizen of the United States from working in excess of eight hours a day.

In this connection I will say that so far as the departmental service is concerned I am willing to concede the eight-hour law as it stands; indeed I regard it as wholesome and desirable. But when the proposition is presented that we shall, by legal enactment, prohibit any citizen of the United States, either in the Government employ or elsewhere, from making any contract not in violation of public law or against public policy which he may deem to his advantage, or his duty, or his interest, I for one enter my solemn protest. To do this is to close the avenues to success, to honor, and to preferment, and overturn that great cardinal principle of free constitutional government in America which makes it possible for the humblest child born in it, by industry, thrift, self-reliance, and patient devotion to truth and duty, to reach the highest station under the Government.

I assert, therefore, that permitting printers to work twelve hours per day, on piecework or in any other way, if done voluntarily and under contract, was not and is not a violation of the eight-hour law, as it is called, and the assertion that in so doing either the Public Printer or the President has sanctioned or permitted or authorized any infraction of that law is wholly gratuitous and without any sort of foundation in truth.

Now, what is the correct construction of this law? What does it mean? What was its object?

This law has been interpreted by the highest court in the land; and that interpretation is directly in the teeth of the assumptions to which I have alluded. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the United States vs. Martin, 4 Otto, makes use of this language:

On the 25th of June, 1868, Congress passed an act declaring that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

This was a direction by Congress to the officers and agents of the United States, establishing the principle to be observed in respect to the labor of those engaged in its service. It prescribed the length of time which should amount to a day's work when no special agreement was made upon the subject. There are several things which the law does not regulate it may be worth while to notice.

Let me emphasize that paragraph:

It prescribes the length of time which should amount to a day's work when no special agreement was made on the subject—which concedes the right of every American citizen to make a contract to suit his own convenience either with the Government or anybody else; and any law to the contrary is a violation of the personal liberty of the citizen and inimical to the whole system of popular government in this country.

The Supreme Court in this same case say:

Principals, so far as the law can give the power, are entitled to employ as many workmen, and of whatever degree of skill, and at whatever price they see fit, and, except in some special cases, as of children or orphans, the hours of labor and the price to be paid are left to the determination of the parties interested. The statute of the United States does not interfere with this principle. It does not specify any sum which shall be paid for the labor of eight hours, nor that the price shall be more when the hours are greater or less when the hours are fewer. It is silent as to everything except the direction to its officers that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for a laborer.

After reading this decision how can any one say that the statute forbids any laborer from making his own contracts and working any length of time his necessities or obligations may require, or how can it be said that any Government official has been derelict of duty who makes such a contract? This position is not tenable, and I maintain that no such law should ever be passed as applied to any freeman.

Further on the Supreme Court say, by way of illustrating the effect of the statute, that—

There are some branches of labor connected with furnaces, foundries, steam or gas works, where the labor and the exposure of eight hours a day would soon exhaust the strength of a laborer, and render him permanently an invalid. The Government officer is not prohibited from knowing these facts, nor from agreeing, when it is proper, that a less number of hours than eight shall be accepted as a day's work. Nor does the statute intend that, when out-of-door labor in the long days of summer may be offered for twelve hours at an uniform price, the officer may not so contract with a consenting laborer.

I submit that the right of a laborer to contract for any number of hours of labor per day, at any price he pleases, under this statute, as the Supreme Court construes it, can not be questioned for one moment, and it is unwise, misleading, pernicious, and absolutely wrong for any one to so argue, and thereby stir up strife and discontent when none exists. For we all know—indeed it is notorious—that the best paid of all our labor, as a rule, is that in the Government employ.

Now, what were the facts in the case from which I have been reading?

Martin was employed at the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, at $2.50 per day, with an understanding that he should work twelve hours per day. While this contract was in force the eight-hour law went into effect. Martin claimed advantage of its provisions. It was denied, and he continued work, accepted the $2.50, and receipted the Government as per contract. Afterwards he sued the United States for the extra four hours for each day's work. It was in this state of case that the Supreme Court said:

We are of opinion, therefore, that contracts fixing or giving a different length of time as the day's work are legal and binding upon the parties making them.

* * * * * * *

The claimant's contract was a voluntary and a reasonable one, by which he must now be bound.

And Martin's alleged right to recover was denied. It is this decision of the Supreme Court that this bill seeks to overturn, not only as to Martin's, but as to all the classes named in the bill. Its object is not to enforce existing law or to pay persons having legal or equitable claims against the United States which they can establish in a court, but it is to make new contracts between the United States and these classes of persons, based on no consideration of any kind, and to pay for services never performed, for the services they performed have been once paid for according to the contracts under which they were performed.

If this is not absolutely true, what is the necessity of this bill? If these persons have just and legal claims, why not refer them to the Court of Claims under existing law? Let the facts be found, and if any liability is ascertained let Congress appropriate the money and pay them.

Sir, the very existence of this bill negates any liability of the United States under this eight-hour law. There is no evasion of this conclusion. If this be true, to enact this bill into law is absolute communism. It is simply dividing up the people's money among a class of persons who have no more right to it than I have.

Mr. BRUMM rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not disturb me, as I can not be interrupted. My time does not admit of it.

I do not believe my accomplished and excellent and distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] comprehended fully the import of this bill when he introduced it, and I have not the remotest idea the Committee on Labor understood its scope, because they tell us in their report—

That these yards—

Meaning navy-yards—

undoubtedly contain the bulk of the claims arising under this bill.

Let us look at that for a moment. What classes are covered by the first section of this bill—and I invite the scrutiny of gentlemen to what I am about to say—what are the limitations of the first section of this bill?

That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf, etc.

Covering not only every workman employed by the Government but also in behalf of the Government of the United States.

That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, whether engaged at per diem compensation or piece or task work.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the only limitation to be found in the first section of this bill as to the classes of persons is that they must have been employed "by or on behalf" of the Government of the United States, and engaged at "per diem compensation or piece or task work."

And with those limitations it embraces every person within the limits of the United States so employed since 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, whether engaged at per diem compensation or piece or task work. It embraces every such departmental employé, every laborer engaged at the navy-yards and arsenals, those engaged upon the public buildings, in the improvement of rivers and harbors, gaugers, storekeepers, and others at the internal-revenue warehouses and distilleries, criers and bailiffs of courts, watchmen employed in guarding public buildings, including janitors, posse comitatus, laborers employed in the geological surveys and in the topographic surveys, laborers in the Signal Service, laborers engaged in the survey of the public lands, in the light-houses, marshals at elections—in fine, every laborer and artisan throughout the length and breadth of the land, under the terms of this bill, whether engaged as day laborers or engaged at per diem compensation or piece or task work. These classes of persons have occurred to me since last evening, when my attention was first called to this bill, as persons employed by the day, and I have no doubt there are various others that do not occur to me that will readily occur to others.

This bill not only includes all these classes, but it goes back and proposes to readjust their accounts for the last twenty years on the basis of this bill, wiping out all statutes of limitations, disregarding all sound principles of wise legislation, and violating voluntary contracts long since satisfied and functus officio. But more on this point hereafter.

But, Mr. Chairman, it does not stop here. Where are these men? You do not even except those men——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope I may be permitted to finish this thought.

Mr. TAULBEE. There are more requesting to have time than I have time to dispose of; but I shall yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. I am profoundly grateful to the gentleman from Kentucky.

I say where are these men now? There are no exceptions from these several classes. They may be men who have defrauded the Government and are serving their terms in the penitentiaries of the country. They may have served their terms for crime against the Government, or be defaulters, in Canada to avoid punishment, and yet they may be beneficiaries under this bill.

It was asserted on yesterday that fourteen thousand of these claims were to go to the Court of Claims. I venture to assert the belief that it will go far nearer one hundred and forty thousand than fourteen thousand. It is said that the Navy Department estimates three millions for the settlement of these accounts from that Department. That may be so; but you pass this bill and I think the amount it will cost the Government will go nearer a hundred millions.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Three millions in that Department alone?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; as I have said, in that Department alone.

It is said that this is to benefit fourteen thousand men. But at whose expense? is the question. Why, the other sixty millions of American people who are toiling for their daily bread. Who are they? The farmers, the laborers all over the country, the mechanics, the miners in all the respective classes of mines, the transportation men, the day laborers in the manufactories, the doctors, the preachers, the widows, the orphans, "the butchers, the bakers, and the candlestick makers," all, all, everywhere throughout this broad land. And are to contribute to what? They are to contribute their mite to open a court and make it accessible at the sole expense of the United States to every single man or woman of the class that I have mentioned, that they may rate their wages upon a day of eight hours regardless of the contract on which they labored and under which they were paid in full, and regardless of the decision of the Supreme Court, in so many words declaring that they had a right to make the contracts, and that they are legally valid and binding upon them. That is class legislation in its worst form. And I assert this, Mr. Chairman, that if anything more than has been said was necessary to justify the position assumed in the discussion of this resolution, which was to turn over this House for four days to the control of this committee under the fifteen-minute rule, this bill is an ample justification.

It is far-reaching in its effects and deleterious and injurious in its results upon the people and upon the Government of the United States. It is a bill that ought to be discussed and discussed fully, and when we come to discuss a measure of this kind under the limitation sought to be imposed, I can but be reminded of what Judge Marshall said in one of the greatest opinions he ever delivered. He said:

For he who demands a decision without proper inquiry affirms that the decision he asks does not depend upon inquiry.

Mr. Chairman, I hate the gag law. I believe in full debate on all important or doubtful legislation. Above all is this true if new precedents are to be set, new principles invoked, or new policies inaugurated. Hence it was that, not knowing what was to come before us from this committee, I was ready to insist that debate should not be limited in advance, so that these matters could not be fully discussed. I submit that the wisdom of my course is now apparent. I trust that there will be no disposition on the part of the House to cut off debate, but that this matter will be fully, fairly, and freely discussed.

One other suggestion. How are you to settle with these piece-workers and task-workers? Let me illustrate. A man is employed, we will say, to make shoes at 40 cents a pair. He, at his own election, works twelve hours per day; but he is paid by the pair and not by the day. He got his money. What is the effect of this bill as to him? What rule will you apply to him? Has he not received all that his contract called for. He did not work by the day. But on the theory of this bill he worked four hours each day more than the law required, and should be paid for it. By what rule will you pay him? With all due deference to the committee, not meaning to be offensive, I submit that such a proposition is nonsense.

The same is true in the office of the Public Printer. There the piece-workers get so much an hour, 40 cents, I believe. They work, many of them, twelve hours. They get pay, by express agreement, for each hour they work. What are they entitled to? Have they any claim against the Government? This bill gives them just $1.60 per day more than they contracted for, after the lapse of twenty years, and this sum is to be paid out of taxes collected from all the people—all other laborers included—and all this is to be done in the name of labor. In the name of honest labor I protest against any such legislation as that. There is not an element of justice, or honesty, or equity in it.

How will you settle with the "task-workers?" I confess, unless the term as used in the bill is a synonym for "piece-workers," I do not comprehend in what sense it is used, unless it means that in some branch of the service labor is employed to perform so much work each day. If that be the case which the bill seeks to reach, the same illustration I have given as to "piece-work" would apply to that. I do not dwell on this. By no possible construction that the English language is susceptible of can there be any justice in it. For if a man agrees to perform a certain amount of work for a certain sum, and does the work and gets the money, that is the end of it. The contract is satisfied and the thing is at an end.

Mr. Chairman, it is my deliberate judgment that no piece of legislation has been presented to the American Congress so injurious, so far-reaching, so ill-considered, and so vicious in its tendencies as this bill, unless it be that other class of legislation which obtrudes itself on us in a thousand ways and which looks to making this Government, which was formed for the benefit of all our people, with a few well-defined and enumerated paternal functions, a great political concern to furnish labor or support for the people. This idea involves a complete reversal of the whole theory of our Government. It teaches the doctrine that Government should take care of the people, while in truth the people should take care of their Government.

It is not the province, it is not the function, it is not the duty of the Government to furnish labor; but it is the duty of the people of these United States, who form this great Government—whose Government it is, made by them, of them, and for them—to preserve it as we received it, as a rich inheritance that shall descend to our children and children's children, remembering always that its great object was, not to legislate for classes, or to create or discriminate between them, but to secure the rights of all through just and equal laws.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. This eight-hour law is an old acquaintance of mine on this floor. I first served in the Forty-sixth Congress and was placed on the Committee on Education and Labor: and one of the first bills I had to encounter and consider was this so-called claim under the eight-hour law. I studied up the whole history of Federal legislation in regard not only to mechanical but to clerical labor in respect to statutes, to orders of the executive department, and the decisions of the courts about this eight-hour law in particular.

I very soon found that this bill was s..nply a bold, transparent device to attack the Treasury in the interest of claim agents. From the closest estimate I could make in 1884 it would then have taken about thirty millions of dollars to satisfy the bill. In ten minutes' time I can not go into the details of this thing as they ought to be gone into, especially as we all know that when any proposition comes up here touching labor or the Knights of Labor it causes a general nervous flutter of members to a place of supposed safety on the side of labor akin to that which birds in a dove-cote exhibit when a hawk swoops down upon them. The most mortifying thing to me in my Congressional experience is the pitiable manner in which members can be stampeded from propriety and common sense by almost any measure for the pretended good of labor.

This is simply a measure to give every man who has labored in any department of the Government at any time during the last twenty years a claim to ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. It is that and nothing more. It is intended to create an aristocracy of labor, and to give the claim agents probably 25 or 50 per cent. of whatever they may recover from the Government.

Just think of it. All the amounts we have appropriated to erect public buildings in the last twenty years, exceeding probably $100,000,000; all the amounts we have appropriated for rivers and harbors, equal to about another $100,000,000, perhaps; all we have spent to build ships, as well as all we have expended in any way at the army arsenals, forts, or wherever laborers, workmen, and mechanics have been employed in any of the departments, under the terms of this bill every such laborer, workman, and mechanic is authorized, without being entitled to it by existing law, to give the Court of Claims all the business it can likely do for the next five years to audit accounts that the Government does not owe at this time.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. Not when I have but ten minutes. Extend my time, and then any member can cross-question me and I will undertake to kill this bill so dead that it will not show its face any more this Congress. [Laughter.]

Why, sir, the Supreme Court of the United States in two decisions—the United States vs. Martin, 4 Otto, in 1876, and the case of the United States vs. Driscoll, 6 Otto, 1877—have decided that this eight-hour law was simply a declaratory, and not a mandatory, law; that it merely intended to add one more item to the time-table in arithmetic and define what should be considered a day's labor where the parties themselves had not had any understanding about the time. That is all there is of it.

I wish I had time to have the two decisions read. The court held that the law did not prevent the heads of Departments from making a special contract for a day's labor of more than eight hours. And what has been the regulation of this Government in every Executive Department, from its foundation up to the present time, or rather up to the time this eight-hour law was adopted in 1868, both as to hours of labor and rates of wages? This is the law:

> That the hours of labor and the rate of wages of the employés in the navy-yards shall conform as nearly as is consistent with the public interest with those of private establishments in the immediate vicinity of the respective yards, to be determined by the commandants of the navy-yards, subject to the approval and revision of the Secretary of the Navy.

That act was passed in 1862. There never had been any law previous to that time, but the principle of that act had governed every Executive Department from the day the Government was organized, and that has been the practice of our whole administration ever since. The construction put upon the eight-hour law by the Supreme Court in the two cases to which I have alluded has been adhered to by all the Departments ever since until Mr. Chandler, in 1884, getting ready perhaps for the then approaching Presidential election, concluded he would apply the eight-hour law, so as to get as many Democratic employés as he could to vote the Republican ticket, and now I suppose some Democrats want to reciprocate. [Laughter.]

Why, sir, simply for public buildings and for rivers and harbors at this very session of Congress in all probability $20,000,000 will be appropriated, and if the Government chooses to give its employés 25 per cent. more wages than are paid for the same labor where the buildings shall be erected or the rivers and harbors shall be improved how many Republicans will vote the Democratic ticket to get employment under this Administration as a favored or pet laborer? Are you Republicans over there going to furnish such a fund for Democrats with which to electioneer against your own party? Are you going to reward the pestiferous claim agents who are behind this bill? For they are behind it, and there is no doubt about it. Are you for the sake of merely making them your friends and partisans going to pass this bill to rob the Treasury, more for their benefit than for the benefit of the laborers? I do not believe you will do that; and I do not believe the Democrats will permit it to be done. What does this bill do?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir; I have not time.

Mr. SPOONER. I merely wish the gentleman to inform me how the Republicans can pass the bill in the House when they are not in control, and the Democrats have a majority?

Mr. TILLMAN. Now listen to the language of the bill. I am amazed that any man could have the audacity to present such a bill here. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRUBLE. No reflection on the Democratic side, I hope?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; and I am glad that it was a Republican, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], who introduced the bill. Listen to its language:

> That whoever, as laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] be extended ten minutes; an equal amount of time to be given to the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no limit has been placed on this debate by the House. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] be extended ten minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] objects. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as several gentlemen to whom I would be very glad to yield have asked me for time, to come out of this hour, which requests I have found myself unable to grant, I desire to ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have been limited to so short a time as to be unable to say what they had to say on this bill be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope that leave will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the eight-hour law in its spirit, and I hope the time will come in this country when eight hours will be all that will be required for the laboring man to work, not merely in Government employ, but throughout the land. But, Mr. Chairman, if the friends of the eight-hour law suppose that this bill will give it a standing in the community or throughout the country, I fear they make a mistake. Under the influence of that sympathy which we all have or ought to have for the movement to reduce the hours of labor, this bill proposes to do injustice to the workingmen throughout the country who in the end will have the cost to pay. While there may possibly be some merit in some particular part of it, yet the bill is so loosely drawn, so unguarded, that the operation of it would bring down the condemnation of the people of this country upon the Congress that should pass it and would excite a prejudice against the eight-hour movement, and tend to make it odious rather than otherwise.

If these gentlemen who worked ten hours had stood up as laboring men ought to have done, had refused to work beyond the legal time, and had required the enforcement of the law, they would now stand in a much better position before Congress and before the workingmen of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while the eight-hour law is valuable as a monitor, as a sign to which the laborers of the country may look, as a promise of what is to come in the future, as an enactment it can have little or no effect. If we want to have eight hours suffice for a day's labor for the working people of this country, if we want to make eight hours per day a sufficient time for the laboring man to earn a subsistence, we must turn our attention to another character of legislation. We must wring the water from the railroad stocks of this country that is draining into the coffers of capital the products of labor; we must wring the water from the telegraph monopolies and from the syndicates and trusts, and we must stop wringing the money from the tax-payers of this country to the amount of $400,000,000 each year to be piled up in the Treasury. Our present system is using up the substance of labor. Our present system makes it necessary for men to work sixteen hours a day in order to live, when they ought not to have to work more than eight hours. If we quit taking away in this manner one-half of the profits of the workingman's labor to fill the Federal Treasury and to fill the coffers of the Goulds and the Vanderbilts, then the workingman will be allowed to retain his earnings and eight hours' labor a day will suffice to make him a living. That is the only way to enforce the eight-hour law—to bring about such a condition of things that eight hours' labor a day will bring men a subsistence.

But how is it now with the working people of this country? Speaking for those that I know personally, the great farming element, they are up at 4 o'clock in the morning, and they work from that time until it is dark; and yet many of them, after working fourteen and sixteen hours a day regularly for years, have their farms mortgaged, are unable to pay their taxes at the end of the year, and are compelled to borrow money to subsist upon.

While we refuse to change the system; while we refuse to repeal the laws that place these burdens upon labor in the way of taxation; while we refuse to squeeze the water from the railway stocks and from the telegraph stocks and from the syndicates, it will be impossible for the workingman to make a living by working eight hours a day. [Applause.]

Mr. TAULBEE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, while I agree fully with all that has been said in opposition to this measure, I wish to state some other and different views than those presented by gentlemen who have thus far addressed the House. The chairman of the Committee on Labor said that that committee had prepared this bill, and that they were the authors of it. Well, if the Committee on Labor claims the authorship of this bill, it certainly takes a very great responsibility from the shoulders of the gentleman who professes to have introduced it, because I challenge the House on an examination to show where there has ever been before, in this House or in any other legislative body, such an act offered for the consideration and adoption of an intelligent body of men. It is so vicious, it is so absolutely wrong in principle, in verbiage, even in form, that you can scarcely conceive how any person acquainted with legal proceedings could draught such a bill.

The first section provides compensation for labor. What labor? Why, Mr. Chairman, under that bill I insist that a fair construction of the first section of it allows a laborer who has worked for the Government to go into court and recover a day's wages for less than eight hours' service, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] clearly showed on yesterday. This is the fair construction of this section. And the second section of this act is absolutely so vicious that it is hard to believe that it is offered in good faith for adoption by this House.

The second section has this provision, among others:

> And no statute of limitation or payment made or receipt given for a less sum per day than the full price of a day's work, as provided in the first section, shall bar the right of recovery.

Now, this section assumes that these claims may be barred by the statute of limitation, and, if so, this bill desires to take this class of claims out of its operation and revives and revivifies them, and permits them to be presented in a new garb for additional pay.

Is there a lawyer in this House who can say that when a claim is barred by the statute of limitations, is actually extinguished, that subsequent legislation can enact such a measure as will revive and bring it into life?

The second section of this bill further provides that in the consideration of these claims the statute of limitation shall not apply. In other words, it assumes that these claims are now barred by some existing statute of limitations, but insists that this House by this act may add vitality and life to them, so that the Court of Claims can go back for twenty years and take up all these claims so barred, if they are barred, and consider them. I say such legislation is absolutely vicious, absolutely wrong. It is against sound law and sound principles of legislation or good conscience. It has neither equity nor justice to recommend it, and has no merit as a legislative enactment.

Another principle of this bill as proposed refers all these demands to the Court of Claims for final adjudication.

I have as profound respect for the courts of this country as any member of this House while such courts are transacting the business that properly belongs to them, but so long as I may be a member of this House I will never consent to refer any case to the Court of Claims, or the Supreme Court, or to any other court, that properly belongs to this House for adjudication or final judgment.

Now, sir, what is the duty of this House? We owe it to the people to perform the duties for which we were sent here, and should assume the responsibility for our action upon this as well as upon all other matters. The Supreme Court is not responsible to the people; we are directly responsible. This bill is a confession on our part of our inability to deal with the case. When you refer a case to the Court of Claims for final judgment that is the end of it. Whether it is right or wrong we must pay it if the decision is against the Government.

I am willing that we shall refer cases to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of fact, or to a committee of this House, when the consideration of such cases is a part of our own duty; and I will say in addition that it is against the policy of this Government to allow any person to sue the Government, to take the Government into court there to be sued. It is presumed that the Government will pay its just debts without being sued, and I think it does.

Another objection to this bill is that it is class legislation. The Government can not be sued by its employés; then why should the persons mentioned in this bill be made a favored class to the exclusion of others? Laws should be general in their application and operation, and consequently these parties should not be allowed to go into court and sue the Government when you exclude all the other creditors of the Government.

There are other creditors equally meritorious. You exclude them and you attempt by class legislation here to allow these parties to go into court. This act might also be called properly an arrearage act. There is another class of persons—the lame and wounded soldiers—who it is said the Government is in arrears to and whose claims I regard much more meritorious than the claims now under consideration. Why is there not some provision made for them in this bill? Mr. Chairman, feeling as I do I can not support this bill with the pernicious effects it would have in filling the courts with claims and in starting up litigation about matters that are now absolutely settled, where the parties themselves had the right to make the contract and made it.

I wish to allude to another point in this case. Two of my colleagues from Illinois introduced an amendment to this bill. They seemed to think there were some claim agents behind this, and introduced an amendment to the effect that a claim could not be prosecuted in the name of an assignee of the laborer. Such an amendment is wholly unnecessary. Any lawyer should know that an assignee of an open account can not go into court and prosecute in his own name. The right of action is in the claimant himself who rendered the labor. He did not have a negotiable instrument from the Government. He had no note or bond which he could assign to these agents, so as to vest the legal title in the assignee. What he had was simply an open account which he could not transfer by assignment, so that the assignee could bring the action in his own name. The action must be in the name of the party who rendered the service, or, if dead, in that of his administrator.

But with that amendment the bill is still absolutely vicious by giving to these parties what they could not at the time have contemplated to receive. I am in favor on all occasions and shall ever be in this House in favor of labor. But labor in this House needs no affirmative act in its behalf. It simply needs the vicious acts that are now oppressing it and holding it down repealed.

What to-day is the trouble with labor in Ireland? Why, sir, it is the eviction act and kindred acts. Repeal those acts and the manhood strength of Ireland could then become an irresistible power, standing ready at its post while the whole Irish race, rallying to the support of such measures, would cry, "Down with the land system that has cursed and depopulated Ireland!"

And what is the matter to-day with our own American laborer? Is he not also crushed with unjust laws which take from him the well-merited reward of his labor and give it to monopolists and syndicates? By the laws of Congress you take one-third of the compensation for the laborer's service; you take one-third of his wages for the support of the Government and the benefit of the class of men who are seeking to assert their unjust claims before this House. The sugar a man uses, the blankets which cover him and his family, the stockings they wear pay an average of 47 per cent. duty. Therefore, if he earns but the miserable pittance of $1.50 a day, he is deprived of one-third of his earnings by the Government in paying duties on the meager necessities of life.

What labor wants is that we shall put the burdens of government where they belong, and not oppress the laborer by them. It must be admitted that for the last quarter of a century in this country the working classes, including the farmer, have not received open-handed justice. All manner of legislation has been resorted to in the interest of monopoly, but in these later days there has come to the wealth-producing classes of the United States such a knowledge of their rights and their wrongs that they are about to unsettle the monopolists in their peaceful possession of their perquisites, absorbing by law the whole of labor's earnings, except so much as will afford a bare living. It is a monopoly of place, a monopoly of power, and a monopoly of production that now crushes labor and forces it here to this House for some redress.

There is now a giant struggle going on in this country between the people and monopoly. Monopoly is strong-willed, clear-brained, grasping, and merciless as death, as cunning and bloodless as a serpent; it is attempting to insnare the workingmen of this country, but they will arise in their might and strangle it to death. Its robbery takes on itself the form of law, and in the name of law, as in this instance, robs the enterprising, industrial, and wealth-producing classes of the products of their talents and labor. While this system continues it will be an outrage to pass this bill. I do not ask an affirmative act in the behalf of labor, but I do in the interest of labor, and in the name of labor repudiate this act. It is not in the interest of labor, as it claims, but is in the interest of claim agents who hang around this Capitol.

Mr. Chairman, now a few words in regard to the bill itself and its supposed operation. It is to pay, no person can definitely say to how many laborers, workingmen, and mechanics, for services rendered the Government in the last twenty years under what is known as the eight-hour law and to compensate for all overtime. It would involve the bringing of a lawsuit for each separate claim for all persons of this class who worked for the Government in the last twenty years. There can be no question but that many of these parties are now dead and others have left the country; but the bill proposes to extend the time for two years, so that said parties may be found by claim agents and others interested in this bill and their claims presented. It is supposed, at least, that one hundred and forty thousand suits would be brought under this act, and the liability of the Government is supposed by those best informed to be somewhere between thirty and fifty millions of dollars. It is true that the Committee on Labor puts the estimate at something less than this; but the truth is that no one is able to tell the number of persons to be benefited nor the amount involved. It can not possibly be an honest measure for honest ends, but evidently is in the interest of claim agents around the national Capitol, who make their living out of the Government in this way. These claim agents infest the Capitol as buzzards do a scavenger's dirt-cart.

Now, for one moment, as to the facts of the case. It seems that Congress, on the 28th day of June, 1868, passed what is called the eight-hour law, which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for laborers, workingmen, and mechanics now employed or who may be hereafter employed by the Government of the United States.

No person is finding fault with this law. I only wish personally that it could be extended to all classes of labor and to all business everywhere. I wish to have it apply to the mechanic, the laborer, the farmer, and, in fact, to all manual labor. It would be desirable and very beneficial. But that is not the question involved here. The parties employed by the Government, and who wish to secure redress for grievances by this bill, were employed by the Government under special contract for a special time at a special rate per day. The services were rendered under special contract; they received their pay in full, gave the Government receipts, and now twenty years after the transaction has elapsed they come to Congress and want this act passed, so as to open all these transactions between the Government and the employés during all this period.

Who can tell now how many hours the laborer rendered? The officer in charge of the Government work at that time is not in charge now. The people have seen fit since to make a change in the administration, and new officers are now in charge; therefore, who can know anything about these old transactions? No one is able to say whether or not the party worked eight, ten, or twelve hours a day. So the Government could be imposed upon by any of these parties who could claim they worked more than eight hours a day. It is certain that they were paid at the rate and time agreed upon between the parties. They saw proper to work at those wages and to give receipts in full for their services, and no law should be passed disturbing this voluntary act of these parties. There can be no objection in this connection to the eight-hour law. In fact, there never was any intention by that law to interfere with special contracts. All the purpose of that law was this: where no time was agreed upon by parties as to how many hours would constitute a day's work, then the eight hours should be a day's work. It was simply declaratory and not mandatory. The Supreme Court has expressly passed on this law in the case of The United States vs. Martin, 4 Otto, 400, and the case of The United States vs. Driscoll, 6 Otto, 421, that if a party would made a special contract to work ten hours a day, to constitute a day's work, at the end of the time he could not sue and recover for more than a day's labor. In other words, it leaves the parties at liberty to make their own contracts in any manner they see proper. This is right, and recognizes the individual liberty of the citizen. But under what obligation is the Government to these employés? Were they not better paid than other classes of labor? Can it be contended for a single moment that this bill is in the interest of labor? It is a fact that those employés received from $800 to $1,600 per annum. The laborer on the farm in Illinois is compelled to put up with $300 a year for his services, and not only eight hours a day but from early morn to late at night. In the summer season he works from twelve to fourteen hours a day. What farmer realizes from $800 to $1,600 per annum from his farm and property? After he settles his year's work, pays his taxes, in nine cases out of ten he has not a dollar remaining from his labor. But, as I stated, the Supreme Court of the United States has interpreted this law and declared its effect as follows. The court say in the first-named case in regard to this law:

This was a direction by Congress to the officers and agents of the United States establishing the principle to be observed in the labor of those engaged in service. It prescribes the length of time which should amount to a day's work where no special agreement was made upon the subject. * * * It does not specify any sum which shall be paid for the labor of eight hours, nor that the price shall be more when the hours are greater, nor less when the hours are fewer. It is silent as to everything except the directions to its officers that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for a laborer.

Mr. Chairman, this question has assumed a very broad range in discussion on both sides, and the inquiry who would be compelled to pay the $30,000,000 might not be inappropriate if this bill should become a law. It seems to me that every interest is represented in this House, looked after, and vigorously pressed, except the interest of the tax-payer. Appropriations are asked for every conceivable scheme in the world, for building railroads, canals, telegraph lines, steamship lines, public buildings, etc., but very little is said about the tax-payer and the party who has to bear all this burden. By such legislation as is here proposed and kindred acts the expenses of the Government annually reach the enormous sum of $400,000,000 per annum, or $8 for each man, woman, and child in the United States, or $40 for the head of each family. It seems to me that it is time to call a halt. This class of legislation should be stopped and some effort made by this House to relieve the country from the onerous burdens under which it is now laboring. The agricultural interests of the country are absolutely suffering, and the parties in this most useful of all pursuits are scarcely able to make a living, not by working eight hours a day, but sixteen.

Trusts and monopolies through vicious legislation are destroying the labor and the agricultural interests of this country. We are told as a fact that in the State of Illinois alone there are $620,000,000 mortgages on our farms. It is said that in ten of the Western States the mortgages on the farms amount to $3,422,000,000. This vast sum is held by Eastern capitalists, and bears interest from 6 to 10 per cent. per annum. Neither does this sum or any part of it pay any taxes of the farmer, or bear its just proportion of the national debt. And yet, in the face of this great agricultural depression, there is nothing being done by this House as yet to relieve the country. As it now is, the money to defray the extravagant legislation is paid by the iniquitous tariff system, which places the highest taxes on the necessaries of life, so that the burden falls heaviest on the toiling masses. This side of the Chamber, at least, is pledged to change this condition of affairs and not to increase labor, but to increase the rewards of labor and to keep it in right hands, and cheapen the cost of living. The converse of this proposition has been pursued by the party in power for twenty years in this country, and by this means the pockets of the laborers are kept empty. The chief apostle of the Republican party, Mr. Ingersoll, in nominating Mr. Blaine at Cincinnati, said "that all money must be made, not by law, but by labor." This is a greater mistake than he claims Moses ever made, judging by acts of the Republican party in the last twenty years.

By repeated acts of Congress in the last twenty years millions of dollars were transferred from the people to the bondholders without consideration; that is, the rich made money in other ways than by labor. Among these acts I will mention the 5-20 bonds, $1,600,000,000 in amount, issued during and just after the war. They bore 6 per cent. interest per annum, and were payable not in gold and silver coin, but in "lawful money," and lawful money at that time meant greenbacks. But an act was passed in 1869 converting this greenback debt into a gold debt, and as the bonds had cost only 70 cents in gold the money made without labor was a clear $480,000,000. In the last twenty-five years the holders of Government bonds have been paid in interest alone $2,323,000,000, a sum greater than the entire bonded national debt at its maximum. And now, Mr. SHERMAN, leader of the Republican party, says:

I think the time has arrived when the standard dollar, and trade-dollar, and the fractional coins should be freely received into the Treasury, and, when needed, issued with enough silver in them equal in market value to a gold dollar.

What would be the effect of such a law if it was passed? It would simply increase the debts, national, State, county, city, school-district, railroad and individual, 20 per cent., or one-fifth. These debts now aggregate about $5,000,000,000, and to increase 20 per cent. would make an additional indebtedness of $1,000,000,000, which sum would be a free gift, in the form of law, from the people to the bondholders, which I think the people are not willing to do. But, Mr. Chairman, this is a digression from the question under consideration, but yet it is the truth, and the truth may be told at all times. I wish to favor labor, but I do not wish to divorce labor as a separate organization from the other industries of the country. I wish to class the laborer, the farmer, and the mechanic, and those engaged in manual labor as the wealth-producing classes, and advocate such measures as may be to the interest of all. I fully indorse, and I think the people will indorse this fall, what President Cleveland has said in his last annual message in regard to the laboring classes. He says:

All will acknowledge the force of an argument which involves the welfare and liberal compensation of our laboring people. Our labor is honorable in the eyes of every American citizen; and as it lies at the foundation of our development and progress, it is entitled, without affectation or hypocrisy, to the utmost regard.

This is the light in which labor is viewed by the Executive of the nation, and if the Committee on Labor of this House wish to do some good to the laboring classes it must be in the line of the President's message. Those who oppose the President and his policy have a very poor opinion of the laborer. They think he will do as a "hewer of wood or a drawer of water," but that he has no other rights only to create wealth which monopoly absorbs by unjust legislation. Labor and monopoly are now engaged in a fierce battle in this country which must be fought to a final issue. The parties are face to face in an open field and labor must suppress monopoly or monopoly will starve labor, even in this country where there is abundance for all. At the present time, more than at any former period of the history of the country, is monopoly becoming oppressive. Monopolists control the trade, the wealth, and politics of the country. They bribe the bench, shape legislation, make corners in stock markets, grain markets, and all other kind of markets. When monopolists combine they control the values of the country and influence the politics. They make the poor man's bread dearer, his fire and home more expensive and more difficult to obtain, and the money he gets from his labor less valuable. Monopoly is not content in absorbing railway and telegraph lines, the arteries and veins of commercial life, but the very necessaries of life are subject to its greed.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that in a country so free and fertile, so new and productive, these things should not be. In society and government what is for the good of all the people is for the good of each, and what is good for each is good for all, and it is for the Committee on Labor of this House to devise such legislation as will forever liberate labor from the iron grasp of monopoly, and under the leadership of the President (who recognizes the nobility of labor) and his party it will be enacted into a law and will live on the statute-books to protect future generations. There are two great systems of thought and opinion in this country which contend for the mastery. Of these what the President asserts, in my judgment, is bound to ultimate triumph, because it asserts the rights of the people to be superior to those of the monopolists and the privileged class. It is time now for distinct assertion of the correct principle of this question by this House, and the maintenance of them and redemption of the pledges made to the laboring classes at the polls. The reign of monopoly has been long enough and has already gone far towards converting the country into a plutocracy, one of the worst forms of government, that form of government based on "Mammon." The whole system of government is threatened by this tendency. Something should be done and done quickly to avert this threatened crisis, and what is it? Clearly there is but one thing to do, and that is for all the labor organizations of the country to follow the President, who has so boldly taken his position on this question, and to sustain him in his fight against the money-bags of the country.

Labor must unite with the President and his party, and being aroused by the great and long-continued wrongs it has endured fight with him and his party to final victory; and in his next annual message the President will issue a new act of emancipation, freeing labor from the shackles of monopoly, and reaffirm the sound doctrine that labor shall not be pauperized by charity and that monopoly shall not be fostered by tribute. Then will the laborer and the manufacturer feel a manly sense of independence and self-reliance, and the army of honest toilers will be relieved from the support of special classes. Labor will be placed where it justly belongs, giving and receiving equal benefits, recognizing the brotherhood of man and denying the right to levy tribute upon one man's industry to support another, but that all men are equally entitled to the varied bounty with which God has blessed the earth and which is the common inheritance of all mankind.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I believe an eight-hour law, properly guarded, is wise and just, and so believing insist that the law should be honestly enforced. The Government should not seek devices by which the law may be set aside. The eight-hour law is a declaration on the part of Congress that eight hours a day is all that the laborer should work in order to obtain payment for a full day; and that for that labor the workman should be paid a sufficient sum with which to support himself and family; that is, it puts the seal of condemnation of the General Government upon the idea that the laboring man should be compelled to work ten, twelve, or fourteen hours a day to feed and clothe his family.

Therefore the law should be so amended that the United States should employ as many laborers as it has days' work of eight hours to be performed. The system of employing laborers by the piece or at so much an hour should be discontinued, as it is by such systems that the wise and beneficent purposes of the law are defeated. The present law should be so amended that it shall no longer be within the power of any officer of the Government, high or low, to set it aside. That the present law is a dead letter on the statute-books none will deny. To remedy this crying evil the Committee on Labor should address itself. The present bill looks backward; it does not remedy an existing evil. It should be so amended that it will render to the laborers of the past every farthing due them, and make it impossible for like wrongs to be inflicted upon the laborers of to-day by those in authority. I am ready now, as I trust I shall ever be in the future, to aid the committee and the friends of justice and fair dealing in accomplishing this result. The amendments I offered on yesterday were for the purpose of aiding in perfecting the bill. The first amendment proposed is:

That all suits shall be commenced and prosecuted in the name of the laborer, workman, or mechanic, his heirs, administrator, or executor. If upon the hearing it shall appear that a claim has been assigned to any person or persons, the suit shall be dismissed.

This is to protect the man who rendered the service, if alive, or his widow and orphans, if dead. It is a check upon sharks who would, under one pretense and another, obtain these claims for a mere song, thereby defrauding the real beneficiaries under the bill. To this I trust no member of the committee will object.

The next amendment is a new section, and in these words:

And it shall be unlawful for any attorney or other persons to charge or receive, either directly or indirectly, a greater fee than 10 per cent. of the amount collected on any claim or number of claims collected or prosecuted under this act. That any contract or agreement entered into in violation of this provision shall be null and void, and the attorney or the person who shall, either directly or indirectly, take, receive, or ask for a greater fee than herein provided for shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment, and shall thereafter be barred from practicing in any court in the United States or before any Department.

The purposes of this amendment are clearly in the interest of the parties to be benefited under the provisions of the bill. It enables the parties to secure the services of competent attorneys, and at the same time protects them from the unconscionable contracts of those who would speculate upon the needs of the laboring men, the nation's creditors. It protects them from their pretended friends. It provides a suitable punishment by fine and imprisonment for its violation. In my judgment it would be still better if these claims were referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury to be audited and paid by the United States, thus rendering it unnecessary for the claimant to pay any fees. The laborer, Mr. Chairman, is "worthy of his hire." Let the pledges of the Government to him be kept both in letter and spirit. The men who labor should be honestly dealt with. Upon their prosperity depend the future happiness and perpetuity of the Republic. The son of the laboring man of to-day will be the legislator of to-morrow. If this nation is to maintain its supremacy, it must look to the education of the masses. This can only be accomplished by labor receiving its just reward.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. I introduced one of those bills upon which this bill is founded. As the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has put it, I had the audacity to introduce such a bill. It was brought to me by representatives of mechanics, carpenters, and workingmen living in my district. No claim agent came to me, as has been suggested, nor have I any reason to suppose that, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], any of those interested in this measure were convicts. On the contrary, so far as I know, those who came to me by their representatives are industrious, intelligent American shipwrights and carpenters.

Their position is a perfectly simple and perfectly justifiable one. Prior to the act of 1868 they had entered into a contract with the Government to work so many hours a day, ten hours, at a certain price. Whether that wage, as has been suggested here, was larger than the wages paid by private enterprises or not does not seem to me to have any bearing upon the question. The Congress of the United States saw fit to come in and modify that contract by declaring that eight hours should be a day's labor. That modification, as made by the law passed by Congress, was not accepted by the officers of the Government and was not put in force for some ten months, until the appearance of General Grant's proclamation. It was then put in force and eight hours accepted as the legal day in the Government yards and elsewhere. Under a decision of the Supreme Court subsequently, which seems to me to bar those persons who made any voluntary agreement with officers of the Government, the Navy Department under President Hayes returned to the ten-hour day. Under President Arthur they reverted again to eight hours a day. These men, from the beginning, believing that their contract had been modified by the law passed by Congress, believing that the law in its spirit and intention was designed to make the day of the workingman in the navy-yards and elsewhere eight hours, worked under a protest which they made at the time, and they have been guilty of no neglect in this matter at all. They have presented their claims at the earliest date possible to the authorities. Those claims have been put aside by the auditing officers of the Treasury. These men waited for several years. They then came forward and asked Congress to give them the opportunity to go to the Court of Claims and to reaffirm by direct legislation what they believed to be the spirit and intention of the act of 1868. It seems to me that it is a fair and reasonable proposition. Knowing the men who have made the demand in my district, I am extremely glad that I have presented a bill in their behalf. I do not doubt that the bill can be amended so as to be improved, but that these men have a reasonable claim to go before the Court of Claims with their demand seems to me perfectly clear. This debate has taken a very wide range; it has extended from the letter-carriers of New York to "Uncle Billy Walton," in Mississippi. I do not propose to follow it through all its turns and windings. It is not a question as to the merits of the eight-hour law or as to its repeal. It is simply a question as to whether these men are entitled, according to the act of Congress, to have pay for overtime. The fact that it involves a large sum does not seem to me to touch the question in any way as to whether it is a just claim, nor do I believe that there is a single workingman in the United States who would grudge to his fellow-workingmen, as has been asserted on this floor, the right to go to the courts of the United States and get pay for extra work if that pay is due them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON].

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to protract this debate, because, in the first place, it seems to me that enough has been said; and, in the second place, I am in very bad condition to do justice to either myself or the subject, especially within the limited time at my disposal. There can be no question as to the fact, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that this debate has taken an exceedingly wide range. There can be no question about the fact that an immense deal has been said in this discussion which is absolutely irrelevant, which has no bearing or effect whatever upon the practical issue involved in this bill; and to attempt to answer it would be both a waste of time on my part, and even if I had the time or the inclination I should hesitate to detain the House in such a discussion. Let me say for myself, as a member of this committee, that in agreeing to the report on this bill I did so because I believed there was an element of justice in it; because I believed that the claims set up by these parties were just; and so believing, I would vote to report a measure which would do them justice and give them the rights they were entitled to, let the consequences be what they may. I think my frend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] did himself great credit a few moments ago when, after what he will pardon me for characterizing as a very unsatisfactory effort to prove that the amount to be taken from the Treasury by the payment of these claims was a bugbear sufficient in its enormity to frighten this House from its propriety—I say that he did himself, in my judgment, immense credit when he concluded with the declaration that the amount involved should not enter into the question at all.

Mr. Chairman, I have been in this Congress long enough, I am sorry to say, to discover the practical operation of a truth which history had long ago told me, that among the prime objects for which republican representative government was formed the last two to be accomplished by the representatives of the people in their legislative capacity are these, to do justice and to protect the weak.

I am ready, Mr. Chairman, to vote for any amendment to this bill which will perfect it. As a member of the committee which reported the bill I will waive anything like etiquette or pride of opinion in connection with the bill, and will vote for any amendment which will in my judgment prevent the measure from doing aught but simple justice to those who under the law, as I believe, have a rightful claim for wages which have not been paid them.

Mr. Chairman, we have upon the statute-book a law (this Congress is not responsible for it) prescribing and defining eight hours as the limit of time for a day's work by a workman, mechanic, or laborer in the employ of the General Government. There is no ambiguity about the language of the law. The word "shall" is to be found there; the act is mandatory, and provides that eight hours "shall be" the limit of a day's labor where a mechanic, workman, or laborer is employed by the Government. Now, in the face of such a mandatory statute, what do we find? Persons representing the authority of the Government see fit to do what? To demand and exact that men, forced by virtue of their circumstances to labor with their hands for the support of those dependent upon them, men who had for the time being sought employment at the hands of the Government, should relinquish that employment and go upon the streets in search of such labor as they could find or accept the demand of the Government that they should labor two hours daily beyond the time which the law prescribed. Sir, when the Government presents such a proposition as that to an employé situated as many of them were he has but one thing to do, and that is to accept the proposition. These men did accept it.

I admit that any man who obligated himself to work for ten hours a day, knowing fully the circumstances, as I understand was done by some laborers in certain Departments, will have no shadow of claim for additional compensation under this bill in the event of its passage. But the man who was obliged to accept this hard condition under compulsion has a just claim; and a great government like this, with its hundred millions of surplus money piled in its Treasury, ought to be ashamed not to do the pitiful justice proposed by this bill, no matter how many may be the individuals entitled to make claim and no matter how much it may cost to meet their claims.

Sir, I sympathize with any man who stands on this floor and in justice to the tax-payer, in justice to the property-holder, enters his protest against improper appropriations prospective in their character. I sympathize with any man who seeks to cut down the expenses of the Government and lessen the burden upon the people by reducing appropriations looking to the future. But I have no sympathy with that man, and I may be permitted to say I have no respect for the judgment of that man, who talks about amounts when justice is in the scale, when the proposition is not to expend money for future use, but to pay for services rendered and received. When such a case is presented I am in favor of paying the claim, if a just one, no matter what the amount may be.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the essential facts which determine the justice of this bill are very simple. June 25, 1868, Congress enacted that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor for any laborer, workman, or mechanic employed by or on behalf of the Government. The debate in the Senate when this measure was discussed shows that the object of the law was to test the point as to whether as much work could not be done in eight hours as in ten, the purpose being to pay full day's wages for eight hours' labor. May 19, 1869, President Grant issued his proclamation calling attention to the eight-hour law, and directing that there should thereafter be no deduction made in the wages of such employés of Government because of a reduction of hours of labor. May 18, 1872, Congress passed a law directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay laborers, workmen, and mechanics without deduction of wages on account of reduction of hours of labor for the time between the passage of the eight-hour law and the issue of the President's proclamation.

Subsequently the Martin case, which has been quoted by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], came before the Supreme Court. This was a case where Martin had made a special contract to work for the Government twelve hours per day for six months, at $2.50 per day, and the remainder of the year at $2.25 per day. The court held that the eight-hour law controlled in the absence of a contract, but where a special contract had been made this would control. This decision, therefore, affects only cases of workmen who voluntarily entered into a contract to work more than eight hours at a special rate, and leaves undisturbed the fact that in the absence of such a voluntary contract the law provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work in the case of the class of Government employés named.

To make it clearer what the eight-hour law means, Attorney-General Evarts (12 Opinions, 533) gave the following opinion:

> The plain import of the law is that a laborer, workman, or mechanic in the employ of the Government, whether hired by the day, week, or month, shall only be required to work eight hours a day to earn his daily, weekly, or monthly wages, whatever these may be.

Now, what took place under this law? From the beginning the hours of labor by laborers, workmen, and mechanics were fixed at eight hours in a large proportion of the Departments of Government, but the pay was reduced proportionately until President Grant's proclamation was made. From that time to 1877 the law was enforced in the Navy Department, although only in part elsewhere. From 1877 to 1883 the law was practically ignored, notwithstanding the protests of the laborers, workmen, and mechanics affected. They were required to sign receipts or to enter into involuntary agreements to avoid the law, and in general were obliged to work ten hours to receive a day's pay, or their pay was reduced if they worked only eight hours.

What I insist, Mr. Chairman, is that all this was wrong. Whether the eight-hour law was right or wrong makes no difference. It was a law deliberately enacted by Congress, and the Government of the United States is bound by it. Wherever any laborer, workman, or mechanic employed by or on behalf of the Government has not been paid in accordance with the terms of the eight-hour law, he should be. It has been the proud boast of our Government that it has observed in letter and spirit all its engagements to those who took our bonds and other obligations in the dark hour of the civil war. We should deal with equal fidelityt owards the laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am not one who throttles labor with my left hand while waving the flag of labor in my right. I care not how much money this billl takes from the public Treasury. The question is, to whom does the money belong, to the Government or to the men who have been robbed of it?

The eight-hour law was born on June 25, 1868. It was the child of a four years' agitation among workingmen. They sought a shortening of the hours of labor without reduction in wages. Congress certainly meant to shorten its hours without wage reduction when it passed the eight-hour bill. No one questioned it then; no one ought to question it now. After the passage of the eight-hour act every mechanic and laborer in the employ of the Government was entitled to the shorter hours of labor without reduction of pay. Men employed on the Government buildings in Washington promptly got the benefit of the new law.

In Departments controlled by officials educated at the Naval and Military Academies at the expense of workingmen the law was ignored. Possibly the appropriations were limited. It was easier to make both ends meet at the expense of the mechanic than to reach it by a reduction of routine expenses.

The workingmen in the Navy Department protested. President Grant heard their protest, and issued his first eight-hour proclamation. It was broad enough to include all workingmen in Government employ, but it had no direct effect outside of the Navy Department.

Mechanics in the Post-Office and other Departments made complaint, and nearly three years afterward the President reiterated his proclamation. It was then done so emphatically that the question was thoroughly settled. From that day until the perpetration of the monumental crime of the nineteenth century the intent of Congress in passing the law was observed. It was carried out in all the Departments.

Meantime, under an act of Congress hitched to an appropriation bill, a few of the mechanics in the navy-yard were collecting the money due them under the violation of the law in the Departments before the President's first proclamation was issued. The passage of such an act proved that Congress meant to give workingmen the benefit of the law withoued reduction in wages.

Under this bill a similar privilege is given to men who were robbed of their wages up to the time of President Grant's second proclamation.

"How are we to make a settlement?" is asked. The proceeds of the robbery are not to be returned because you can not see how you are to settle! Send the claims to the Court of Claims under this bill and that court will settle them. Pay to the laborers the wages which were retained.

Next came the decision of the Supreme Court, and Secretary Thompson's ruling under that decision, making ten hours the basis of payment for a day's work. Workingmen protested, and in eight months and twenty-one days Thompson revoked his decision and made eight hours a full day's work, with a proviso that those who worked ten hours should receive extra pay. Not one cent of this extra pay has ever been paid. This bill provides for its payment.

These workingmen have been robbed by Government officials in the face of an act of Congress and Presidential proclamations. This bill virtually provides that the will of Congress shall not be thwarted by overzealous officials. The workingmen must receive their wages under the law passed by Congress or the Government is disgraced.

Let those who think that the amount involved justifies the robbery vote against it, for there is apparently no other argument to excuse such a vote.

Great corporations have been protected here in robberies to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars; empires have been thrown to them and Government securities without stint. Yet members higgle about this proposed act of justice to labor. Already this Administration has forced the return of 57,000,000 of acres of land fraudulently grabbed by great corporations. Now let it compel this act of honest dealing in restoring to workingmen the money which is due them under an act of Congress. That, sir, is what I would call justice. [Turning to the members of the House.] What do you call it? [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN].

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that there are no gentlemen upon this floor who desire to do anything with this bill but that which should be done; and it seems to me that it is entirely outside of the line of discussion that should be pursued here and too light a view of the subject to talk of the motives of gentlemen, that they are in favor of this bill because it will work out political success to either one or the other party. It is too often the case that when a demand from the laborers of this country comes before Congress the men who are called upon to uphold their views are charged with being demagogues before they are scarcely able to define their position.

Now, here is a bill that has come before Congress asking consideration. It asks that where the country has a law in existence that law shall be enforced in the contracts made with the employés of this Government. Why should it not be done? Why is it that in 1868 the law could be passed requiring that eight hours should constitute a day's work, and then for several years thereafter the contractor and persons having charge of this matter should be able to take from the laborers a large number of days' work for which they would receive no compensation? I say that upon the face of the proposition itself it is a wrong that ought to be righted.

Now, what is asked here? That we shall enrich attorneys and claim agents? I take it that is not so. No member of the committee, so far as I am advised, and no member of the House desires anything of that kind. They are perfectly willing this bill shall be modified so as to exclude attorneys and claim agents and give the amounts that may be paid to the persons that did the work. I want the bill to provide for that before I vote for it, and I believe the gentlemen who have the bill in charge want the same thing.

Only two objections have been urged to the proposition. One is that the bill is to cost too much. Some say it will cost $3,000,000; some say it will cost $30,000,000. I take it that argument is met by this consideration, that the Government is able to pay what it owes; and if it is able to pay, why should it not pay this amount, whether it be $3,000,000 or $30,000,000?

Shall the Government, because it has the power, put itself in the position of saying, "We took this labor, we stole this money; and because we are able to do it we are going to do it?" I say that is wrong, and no government can afford to administer its affairs in that way, more especially when we take into account that the labor element is one of the greatest elements of this Government, and must be so during our whole existence.

We must be just in dealing with labor. I have no fear of an aristocracy of labor that may be built up in this country. If we are to have an aristocracy here at all, it should be the aristocracy of labor, and nothing else.

The other argument against the bill is that it is to take away from some of the laborers of the country the means they have to live on. I answer, it is going to give to labor a diversity; it is to give the farmer a home market for his products, and it is to give to these people the money they have properly and rightfully earned.

In conclusion, I repeat that no government can afford to be unjust to any portion of its people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not know that I shall occupy two minutes. I simply want to state in connection with what has been said of the Grant administration, in reference to carrying out the provisions of this law, that I and others of my colleagues at that time waited on the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Adolph Borie, an elegant gentleman and a conscientious official, and also waited on General Grant with a delegation of mechanics, most of whom worked in the navy-yard at Philadelphia. It was in reply to this committee that General Grant said, "Let us carry out the law; it is better to carry out a law, even if the law does not meet the views of the people, than to let it exist as a dead letter."

It was on that occasion he made that remark, and it was a wise and philosophical remark.

I did not rise to discuss the question, and will merely add that justice should be done, and the law while it exists should be carried out now, whether twenty years or ten years or five years have elapsed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill is one of a number introduced in the present Congress for the purpose, as was intended by the introducers, of giving the beneficiaries thereunder the full benefit, and no more, of what is known as the eight-hour law of June 25, 1868. In addition to the bills named in the report as having been introduced, one by Mr. LONG, one by Mr. LODGE, one by Mr. ROCKWELL, and one by Mr. MCKENNA, I will say the committee also had before it another bill, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]; so that five gentlemen of this House have had, in the elegant words of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], the "audacity" to present bills of this kind. The law of 1868 is short and to the point. It provides—

That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States. (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 15, page 77.)

For some time after the passage of this act it was executed only in part. In the erection of the public buildings in this city and immediately under the eye of the Executive, regard was had to the observance of the law, but in the navy-yards and in the arsenals generally no attention whatever was paid to its enactment.

This became so grievous that the workingmen petitioned General Grant, then President of the United States, to redress their grievances; and on the 19th of May, 1869, he issued the following proclamation:

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, and repealed all acts or parts of acts inconsistent therewith:

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby direct that from and after this date no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such workmen, laborers, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 19th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1869, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-third.

U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

I ask the special attention of the Committee of the Whole to the following words in this proclamation. They are a positive order by the Chief Executive of the nation to the officials under him, and constitute the basis upon which employment was given. I quote:

I do hereby direct that from and after this date no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such workmen, laborers, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

In the absence of any agreement signed by any laborer, workman, or mechanic, was not the proclamation of the Chief Executive of the nation, the regulation under that law, and even under the construction given to it by the Supreme Court of the United States, and quoted here, was it not the contract under which those men labored? I say emphatically it was.

Mr. KERR. Did that law fix any rate of wages?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have read the law to the committee.

Mr. KERR. Now answer the question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have read the law and that answers the gentleman's question. From that time up to the 30th day of June, 1877, the employés of the different navy-yards (from whence most of these claims come) were given the benefit of the law, and I want gentlemen who are appalled by the astounding expenditure which they say this bill will necessitate to remember the fact that through several administrations this eight-hour law has been observed, so that payment will not be required for the whole of the past twenty years, as has been asserted here; but, so far as the workmen in the navy-yards are concerned, only since June 30, 1877, and even since then, as I will show later on, at times the law has been observed and payments have been made, so as to still further reduce the amount. In some other of the Departments, however, the law was still disregarded, and May 11, 1872, General Grant, who was still President, issued the following proclamation, which I will read:

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, constituted on and after that date eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas on the 19th of May, 1869, by Executive proclamation, it was directed that from and after that date no reduction should be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor; and

Whereas it is now represented to me that the act of Congress and the proclamation aforesaid have not been strictly observed by all the officers of the Government having charge of such workmen, laborers, and mechanics:

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby again call attention to the act of Congress aforesaid, and direct all officers of the Executive Departments of the Government having charge of the employment of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, to make no reduction in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor. (United States Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 935.)

Mark the plain, direct words, so characteristic of Grant:

I * * * direct all officers of the Executive Departments of the Government having charge of the employment of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States to make no reduction in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

Can words be plainer, more direct, and less liable to misconstruction? They reaffirm the terms under which these workmen were employed, and expressly direct that no reduction in the daily wages should be made because of the reduction of the hours of labor. The workmen relied upon this interpretation of the law and regarded it, as they had a right to regard it, as the contract under which they labored. And this interpretation was correct.

The officials so regarded it, and thereafter for some time the workmen were given the benefit of the law. Those who had not received the benefit of it, owing to the refusal of some of the Departments to regard the law in the first instance, petitioned Congress for relief, and in an appropriation act approved May 18, 1872, Congress inserted the following provision:

SEC. 2. That the proper accounting officers be, and are hereby, authorized and required, in the settlement of all accounts for the services of workmen, laborers, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the 19th day of May, 1869, the date of the proclamation of the President concerning such pay, to settle and pay for the same without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. (See Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 134.)

This act shows the interpretation Congress then put upon the law. The same words substantially are used as were used by Grant:

Pay for the same without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor by said act.

Under this act the employés in the navy-yards were, with exceptions, paid the difference for the period named. Matters ran on in this way until 1877, when came the decision of the Supreme Court which has been referred to.

A foreman employed at the Naval Academy at Annapolis under a special agreement brought an action against the Government to recover the difference between eight hours' and twelve hours' work per day, and the Supreme Court of the United States decided the case and said that his agreement and the receipts which he had given in pursuance of it precluded him from any further claim upon the Government. That was the whole of the case, and that question having been decided, the court's duty was ended. They then go on and in some obiter dicta tell us what the law does not enact. I admit the full force of these obiter dicta as a judicial construction of the act, not a legal decision upon controverted points before the courts, but a construction of the act which it might be safe for us to follow as a guide.

That decision having been made, Secretary Thompson, of the Navy, issued a proclamation or direction to the heads of the navy-yards, calling their attention to this decision, and in that proclamation or direction the Secretary says that "under this construction of the law regulating public labor given by the Supreme Court of the United States the Department has fixed the rate of labor for mechanics, foremen, laborers, etc., on the basis of ten hours a day." That then became the order under which these men worked for the time being. But Congress did not allow the matter to rest there, and in 1878, in the Forty-fifth Congress, a joint resolution was introduced, which passed the House, but failed for want of time to be acted on in the Senate. That joint resolution was in the following words:

Joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That according to the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1868, entitled "An act constituting eight hours a legal day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States," eight hours constitute a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics; and while the act remains upon the statute-book no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, and mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor; and that all the heads of Departments, officers, and agents of the Government are hereby directed to enforce said law as long as the same is unrepealed.

Passed the House of Representatives May 9, 1878.

Attest: GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

That joint resolution shows the sense of the House at that time and its construction of the act. It provides that "while the act remains upon the statute-book, no reduction shall be made in the wages paid by the Government by the day to such laborers, workmen, or mechanics on account of the reduction of the hours of labor." That is the language of the law proposed here now, as it was the language of Grant's proclamation.

The act passed in 1872, I should have said in passing, was not taken into consideration by the Supreme Court in its decision because it was not before the court for construction, and was not even alluded to in the decision of the court in any way.

I should also have said that gentlemen will observe that by the express terms of this act of 1872 a construction was given to the act of 1868. It is expressly enjoined upon the Departments that they shall pay for labor without reduction on account of the reduction of the hours of labor by said act, "when it shall appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction."

I have recurred to this act to show that Congress had interpreted the terms of the original act, and voted money in pursuance of such interpretation, before these obiter dicta came from the Supreme Court.

A MEMBER. What year was that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That was in 1872, and that is the statute law to-day. It has been the statute law all the while these men have been working. Its language is clear and unmistakable.

One gentleman asks me, has there been any adjudication under this statute? I answer him no, because its provisions are so plain, direct, and convincing that even an objecting Auditor could find nothing on which to hang a doubt.

Mr. LIND. Then why have not these claims been settled under the statute? Why is there any necessity for this legislation to-day?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Some of these claims were settled under the statute; and, as I said awhile ago, they are now out of the way. But these claims have not all been acted on. Beside, the act provided only for the then past. As I have said, this act was the solemn construction placed by the American Congress upon the terms of the act in 1868.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have not stated the whole of this case. On the 21st of March, 1878, Mr. Thompson, then Secretary of the Navy, issued another order, which he substituted for his previous order, the order which came immediately after the promulgation of the decision of the Supreme Court upon the eight-hour law. In this second order he says that—

The Department will contract for the labor of mechanics, foremen, leading men, and laborers on the basis of eight hours a day. All workmen electing to work ten hours a day will receive a proportionate increase of their wages.

The full order reads:

[Circular No. 8.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 21, 1878.

The following is hereby substituted, to take effect from this date, for the circular of October 25, 1877, in relation to the working hours at the several navy-yards and shore stations:

The working hours will be: From March 21 to September 21, from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m.; from September 22 to March 20, from 7.40 a. m. to 4.30 p. m., with the usual intermission of one hour for dinner.

The Department will contract for the labor of mechanics, foremen, leading-men, and laborers on the basis of eight hours a day. All workmen electing to labor ten hours a day will receive a proportionate increase of their wages.

The commandants will notify the men employed, or to be employed, of these conditions, and they are at liberty to continue or accept employment under them or not.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

But this is not all. March 23, 1883, the then Secretary of the Navy issued the following order:

[Circular to the yards.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 23, 1883.

The Department confirms its telegram to you of the 20th instant, which was in the following words: "Continue the present eight hours of labor until otherwise ordered." The hours of labor should be from 8 to 12 m. and from 1 to 5 p. m.

W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Will it be believed that in the face of these orders the men were not restored to the eight-hour basis? Yet such is the fact.

I stand here to-day to say that according to the testimony before the committee, notwithstanding this solemn promise of the Secretary of the Navy that those who worked ten hours should receive a proportionate increase of pay, they have never received it. There is his direction to his foremen; there is the decision of the Department under which these men are employed, saying specifically in so many words that they shall be employed on the basis of eight hours a day; but in fact they were worked ten hours a day. Do gentlemen say there is no basis for this claim? It is as plain as law and proclamation can make it.

When, in the Forty-ninth Congress, this matter was first called to my attention as a member of this committee, I will confess that I approached its consideration with some degree of hesitancy. I could hardly understand it to be possible that administration after administration should seek, if not to openly violate, at least to circumvent, the plain meaning of the law. I could hardly conceive it possible that the accounting officers would not allow this money to these men. But I saw before our committee, not the legion of claim agents that have troubled the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], but deputation after deputation of these workmen themselves came before us and asked for this legislation. There was but one claim agent who came before our committee; and I violate no confidence when I say the committee did not allow him to be heard. But we did listen to the statements of these deputations from the laborers themselves. We listened to their plain, unvarnished statement of how they had been treated by these brass-mounted martinets from Annapolis and West Point, and we determined, or at least I for one determined, that I would investigate carefully the propriety and justice of the claims. I have done so the more freely, because they had not behind them the powerful lobby which seems to have invaded the room of the Committee on Claims. These were plain workingmen, laborers and mechanics. They presented their case in a direct, business-like way, referring us to these different proclamations; and on hunting up these documents and the laws on the subject, we became satisfied that the claim was right and ought to be reported favorably.

It may be that this bill is defective in some respects. As one member of the committee I am ready to say that I will welcome any amendment which may guard against any injustice, real or fancied, either to the claimants or to the Government. I am surprised at the alacrity with which certain gentlemen rise to their feet in this case and cry out that there are claim agents behind this bill and that we must cut off these attorneys from receiving their compensation. This we see, although bill after bill appropriating from $45 to $45,000 has been passed here and not a word said about the fellow waiting in his office down town to divide with the claimant when the draft is obtained. But I concede we do not want to encourage these claim agents; and any amendment which will secure the payment of this money directly to the parties who rendered the service or to their legal representatives will be welcomed by us.

Do you call this "class legislation?" It is "class legislation." Other classes have had their legislation in the past, and it is time the working classes should have their legislation. It is "class legislation." It is for a class of deserving and needy workmen—not for millionaires, not for men who can spend the whole winter here pushing their bills in order to get money out of the Treasury. This bill is in the interest of men who could not afford to have their committee remain here more than a short time to present their case. This is the kind of "class legislation" which I am decidedly in favor of carefully investigating, and, if found correct and just, I am desirous of using extra exertions to have such legislation passed.

As to the amount involved in this bill, we have made the best computation practicable, and we do not see how it is possible under any circumstances for the amount to exceed $6,000,000. Gentlemen talk about $11,000,000, and I believe one gentleman in the wild exuberance of his fancy raised the amount to $100,000,000. I am glad he spoke so early in the debate as he did, because I suppose if he had let his fancy run riot an hour longer, he would have had the amount a round thousand millions.

The only thing that the committee desire in this matter is that these claims shall be sent to some forum which will properly investigate them and pay what is due. Any change in the language which may be necessary in order that the measure shall best effect this object will be welcomed rather than repelled by us.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] for four minutes.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, it so happens, sir, that I was placed upon the Committee on Labor that had under consideration the bill which is now before the committee. To me was delegated the duty of presenting a report on that bill to this House. I did it by the unanimous vote of that committee, which had for months thoroughly investigated this subject.

I have listened patiently to the arguments for and against the bill pending in this committee. And my faith in the merits of this bill this moment remains not only unshaken, but stronger than it was when this bill was brought before the House.

Now, it is to me an appalling proposition that we who are sent here from every portion of this country as representatives of our people to make laws for their guidance and control should ourselves publish to the country that we, as representatives of the people, are violators of the very law we tell our constituents to respect and obey.

When the Congress of the United States in June, 1868, passed that law, which declared that eight hours should constitute a day's labor for every mechanic, laborer, and workman, it meant what it said. It was not, in the language of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], simply passed as a directory statute, but passed as a mandatory organic law.

I turn to my friends on this side of the House. I ask them when they consider the condition of the people employed in the various Departments of the Government actually working under duress for a greater number of hours than Congress said should constitute a legal day's labor, when the threat was held out to them of the possibility of an empty stomach for their wives and babies unless they obeyed the order and direction of men who were educated in the Naval Academy at Annapolis at the expense of the people, and had no sympathy with the laborers in the navy-yards—I say to my friends, go home to your constituents, go where these millions of laborers are who are not affected by the provisions of this bill, but whose hearts go out in sympathy to the men who have been wronged by the action of the House and by the action of the employing officers in the navy-yards of the country—go home to them, and, if you please, when you are asked the question, "What did you do for the benefit of those toiling masses; what did you do with that law which declared eight hours shall constitute a day's labor?" what answer shall you make to them? Shall you say that law upon the statute-book is like the fruit of the Dead Sea—beautiful to the eye but turns to ashes on the lips; that all promises held out to them of better things were only made to be broken by the very men who made them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time yielded to the gentleman by the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have one minute of time remaining, which I reserve.

Mr. TARSNEY. I now propose to occupy the time which I have reserved in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nineteen minutes remaining.

Mr. TARSNEY. But a few words more, and I shall conclude. Read again, if you please, the history of this legislation in brief. The law was passed in 1868. Ten months and twenty-three days thereafter, on representations made to that grand man, then President of the United States, and whose memory we all revere, Ulysses S. Grant, that this law had been violated by officers of the Government, he issued his proclamation that the law should be enforced in the various Departments where it was intended to apply.

Time went on and again abuses crept in. Why, some of these very men, and unfortunately we have some of them to-day in these Departments whose knowledge of the law in their opinion is higher than that of Congress, higher than the supreme judicial tribunal of the land, setting themselves above the law, evaded and defied it. They construed as a law unto themselves. Again protest came in. President Grant issued his second proclamation, and then it was obeyed during the entire period of his administration, ending with the 4th of March, 1877. After that period came the change in the administration, and one whose name I will not mention here occupied the position of President de facto of the United States for a time. That law was abused and was violated again; and now while we are here as the representatives of our people, these men come before us, not lawyers, not claim agents, for I have never seen one of that class before the committee, but the men themselves, these mechanics and laborers, have appeared before the committee and individual members of the committee and simply asked that which never should be denied in any civilized country to its citizens, the right to go into their own forums, the courts of their country, and under laws enacted by their Government test their claim and define and place upon the record of the courts the legal status of the obligations between the Government and themselves.

They ask no more than that, sir; they should not be required to accept less.

Now, I will not further detain the committee, except that I may ask in connection with what I have said that inasmuch as the report, which is quite a voluminous one and contains these orders and proclamations, and not only that, but the extracts and opinions of eminent Senators and members of this House as contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and which appear in the appendix to this report, giving their various views of the question presented, I ask that this report, inasmuch as it is now exhausted, may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks to-day, for it is my purpose before yielding the floor now, Mr. Chairman, and I announce it for the information of the House, that when this hour shall have expired, or before that, I shall move that the committee rise and then let this matter pass over until the next day. When this committee's order is reached, and when this bill is brought up again for consideration, I hope to find a different expression of sentiment on the part of some gentlemen who have opposed us to-day. In the mean time let those who have been talking all around the bush, who are shooting at a bird they do not see——

Mr. BUCHANAN. And that was not there.

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, and that was not there; let them examine this report and the merits of this case, and when the 16th of April comes around and our bill again comes up, I reckon that they will be better informed upon the subject than the speeches they have made here to-day would seem to indicate. We earnestly desire that each member shall intelligently examine the matter, and we fear not results.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. I must decline to yield, as I have but a few moments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] has fourteen minutes remaining.

Mr. TARSNEY. This bill, with the report, is based not only upon the bill which is before the committee, but upon several other bills which are named at the beginning of the report, and one in addition which I desire to state here in the House was omitted by my mistake; and I desire to apologize to my friend from New York [Mr. COX] for this omission.

A MEMBER. What bill is that?

Mr. TARSNEY. That is House bill 1664, bearing directly upon this subject. All these bills were considered together by this committee, and I desire to apologize for the omission of my friend's bill.

Mr. COX. It is not necessary. That is all right.

Mr. TARSNEY. I desire now to yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRYCE], reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. BRYCE. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment, which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2, by striking out all in line 8, after "United States" and down to the twelfth line, and insert the following words instead:

"Provided, That no claimant shall be entitled to recover any back pay unless he shall have filed at the time of payment a protest against the non-receipt of payment for work performed beyond that of eight hours per day."

Mr. BRYCE. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the eight-hour law and its enforcement. I also believe in the Government meeting all its just obligations. My object in offering this amendment, therefore, is simply to find out which of these employés have fairly earned this extra pay, and thus are fairly entitled to it.

Not to require proof of this would be at the expense of every laboring man in the community who contributes by his toil to pay this tax. Not to require such proof from those who have been in the Government employ would be to make a privileged class of these men at the expense of the hosts who have always been outside. Without some such protection the claims would probably aggregate upwards of $15,000,000, or, in other words, would take about 25 cents of the hard-earned gains of labor from the hand of each member of my district.

Without some such protection as my amendment suggests a keen temptation would be offered to fraud, and by making others pay for privileges they themselves have not enjoyed would be a singular instance of robbing Peter to pay Paul. I hope, Mr. Chairman, my amendment, or some modification of it that will protect the laboring man outside of Government employ, will be carried.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Was not leave given last night to any gentleman offering amendments to have them printed in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. That leave was given.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for a brief question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. A good deal has been said about claim agents, and without any disrespect to these claim agents, I ask if Mr. Daniels, of this city, appeared before the committee in advocacy of this measure?

Mr. TARSNEY. He did——

Mr. BUCHANAN. And the committee declined to hear him.

Mr. TAULBEE. I asked the gentleman from Michigan the question.

Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman from New Jersey has taken from my lips the words I was about to utter. The committee thought itself fully competent to investigate this matter and competent to take care of their bills when they were brought in.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope they will be, but I wish to say in justification of that question that when that same gentleman came before a subcommittee of which I am chairman, he apologized for being late because he had been detained by the Committee on Labor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We did not detain him.

Mr. TARSNEY. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1539) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, had come to no resolution thereon.

CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 3406) to prevent the products of convict labor from being furnished to or for the use of any Department of the Government, and to prevent the product of convict labor from being used upon public buildings or other public works.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any agent or officer of the United States Government to purchase, or, if under his control, to permit the purchase, of supplies of every description to be furnished to or for the use of any of the Departments, or materials to be used in the erection, construction, or completion of public buildings or other public works: And provided further, That in all advertisements for the purchase of supplies to be furnished to or for the use of any of the Departments, or for the erection, construction, or completion of public buildings or public works, and in all contracts made under or in pursuance of such advertisements, there shall be inserted a condition that no convict or prison labor whatsoever, or the product thereof, shall be used by or furnished to any Department of the Government, or employed or used upon any public building or work, or in the preparation or manufacture of any of the articles, materials, or supplies contracted to be furnished therefor.

SEC. 2. That any willful breach of any of said conditions by any contractor shall authorize and work a forfeiture of the contract, and shall constitute a complete defense in bar against any claim or action against the United States for the recovery of any sum or sums under said contract; and it shall be the duty of the officer letting any such contract, upon being advised that any contractor has knowingly violated the terms of such contract, to declare the same forfeited.

The bill was reported with the following amendments:

In line 7 insert "the Army or Navy of the United States or other Government Department, or for use among any of the Indian tribes."

In line 11, after the words "other public works," insert "when said supplies or materials are in whole or in part the product of convict labor."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the adoption of the amendments. They are simply to perfect the language of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If any member desires to speak on this question I will yield him such reasonable time as he may wish. If not I will ask for a vote. This is a bill which we passed in the last Congress by a practically unanimous vote.

Mr. GEAR. I ask that the bill be read as amended.

The bill was read as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I did not hear what were the provisions of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is substantially the same bill as passed the House last session.

The bill was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALIEN LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8724) to prevent the employment of alien labor upon public buildings or other public works and in the various Departments of the Government, etc.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all advertisements for the erection or construction or completion of public buildings or other public works, and in all contracts made under or in pursuance of such advertisements, there shall be inserted a condition that no person who is not a bona fide resident within the limits of the United States, and who is not a citizen, or who has not declared his intention to become a citizen thereof, in the manner provided by law, shall be employed in the erection, construction, or completion of any public building or other public work.

SEC. 2. That any willful breach of any of said conditions by any contractor shall authorize and work a forfeiture of the contract, and shall constitute a complete defense in bar against any claim or action against the United States for the recovery of any sum or sums under said contract; and it shall be the duty of the officer letting any such contract, upon being advised that any contractor has knowingly violated the terms of such contract, to declare the same forfeited.

SEC. 3. No person shall be employed in any department of the Government of the United States (except persons employed in the consular or diplomatic service abroad) who is not a citizen or who has not previously declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. TARSNEY. In the Forty-ninth Congress a bill embodying all the provisions of this one, so far as the first and second sections are concerned, passed this House and passed the Senate, but for some reason failed to become a law. The committee have added to those provisions of the bill the third section, which simply extends its scope.

The object and purpose of the bill are obvious from the simple reading of it. We find, for instance, all along our northern border, extending from Maine to Puget Sound, that many of our Canadian neighbors are coming over upon us, earning our public moneys in free and open competition with the American labor we pretend to protect. They take our money, take it home with them, and spend it in their own country. The same thing, I am informed, obtains along the Rio Grande and elsewhere.

I am likewise informed that in various Departments of the Government here there are people employed by the Government of the United States who have never even declared their intention to become citizens.

There is no Know-Nothingism in this bill. We say as we have always said before, as was said to my father before me, and as to many now here, "Come, but when you come you must place yourself in a position where you will owe some allegiance to that Government from which you obtain your support."

All we ask is that citizens of the United States, or persons who have previously declared their intention to become citizens, and they only, shall be employed upon the public works and in the public service of the United States.

I reserve the balance of my time; and I now move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment, while I ask a question.

Mr. TARSNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MACDONALD. I see that this bill requires that "residents" only shall be employed upon public works. Suppose the Government is prosecuting a public work and is unable to find a sufficient number of residents to push on the work as rapidly as desired?

Mr. TARSNEY. There are residents enough within the limits of the United States, either citizens or persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, to perform all the work that the Government will require.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then the bill is not limited to residents of the locality or of the State, but to residents of the United States?

Mr. TARSNEY. That is correct.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman permit me a suggestion?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to inquire whether it is the intention of this bill to cover cases where parties are now borne on the Government rolls in Washington, but who reside abroad, in Italy, for instance. Will this reach such cases?

Mr. TARSNEY. This reaches everybody except those who are employed in the consular and diplomatic service abroad.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is all right.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it would not be well to insert a provision that American consuls abroad shall be obliged to employ Americans in their offices to the exclusion of foreigners. I know of many instances where the employés of consular offices are foreigners, Americans being excluded.

Mr. COX. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that it would be impossible to enforce such a rule. There are a great many clerks and others connected with the consulates abroad who are of foreign birth, and whose services are necessary, but who could not be made American citizens unless some plan was adopted by which they could not only declare their intentions but could also get their final papers abroad.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not refer to diplomatic officers who require the services of translators and other persons familiar with the language and ways of the country, but I know of many places on the continent of Europe and in Great Britain where American citizens reside, yet the clerks in those consular offices are frequently foreigners, who are employed to the exclusion of Americans who would be glad to take the positions.

Mr. COX. You could not make it uniform.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is a gentleman upon the floor of this House, with the exception of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who can talk Turkish. [Laughter.] It is absolutely necessary that the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States shall be authorized to employ foreigners to act as interpreters and to perform other duties in connection with those offices. For that reason the exception has been made in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That is all right. I do not object to that; but I do object to the mere clerks in consular offices being foreigners, to the exclusion of Americans.

Mr. TAULBEE. By the permission of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY], I wish to suggest an amendment. In line 4 of section 3, after the word "citizen," I propose to amend by inserting the words "and resident of the United States." I will read the provision as it will read if amended:

No person shall be employed in any department of the Government of the United States, except persons employed in the consular or diplomatic service abroad, who is not a citizen and a resident of the United States, or who has not previously declared his intentions, etc.

Mr. TARSNEY. There is no objection to that. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed—ayes 92, noes 5.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire now to ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor be considered in the House, instead of the Committee of the Whole. The changes which the bill proposes to make in the present law are simply to enlarge the duties devolving upon the Commissioner of Labor, to give him wider scope——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that we shall insist on the consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the bill, when,

On motion of Mr. LONG, by unanimous consent, the first reading was dispensed with.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I reserve my time, and ask that the bill be read section by section for consideration.

Mr. REED. What is the effect of the gentleman's proposition? Is it to limit general debate to one hour?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I did not suppose there was any desire for general debate on this bill.

Mr. REED. I do not know whether there is or not. I simply wanted to know the effect of the proposition.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I would like to have this bill reported back to the House and passed as speedily as possible. If the gentleman can facilitate that result in any way, I hope he will do so.

Mr. REED. What is the effect of reserving your time?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no speech to make, but propose simply to explain any feature of the bill in regard to which any question may be raised.

Mr. REED. That is all I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The action of the Committee of the Whole in dispensing with the first reading of the bill does not close general debate, if any gentleman desires to take part in it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered closed, and that we take up the bill for consideration by sections under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object. I do not know that I object to the bill; but I have just examined this report, and I find it does not give any information as to the change which this proposed legislation is to make in the expenses of this branch of the Government. I make my objection simply that the chairman of the Committee on Labor, or some other member who has paid special attention to this matter, may explain the changes proposed by the bill, how it will affect the running expenses of the office as compared with the existing arrangement. I think we ought to have some information on this matter before taking up the bill section by section. I shall probably not oppose the bill after it has been explained.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In regard to expenditures, the change made by the bill is that the rental of offices and other expenses which heretofore have been charged to the Interior Department will be borne by the Commissioner of Labor. The present Commissioner, Mr. Carroll D. Wright, has carefully examined this bill, and its provisions are based on estimates prepared by him. It involves, I believe, the employment of some eight additional clerks of various grades, an increase which he considers essential. According to my information from the Commissioner, the only change in reference to expenses will be the employment of these additional clerks and the transfer of the running expenses from the Interior Department to the Department of Labor.

In the bill we enlarge the scope of the Commissioner's duties by empowering the Department of Labor to inquire in regard to the strikes which are occurring throughout the country. In this way Congress can be, from time to time, informed in regard to these disastrous conflicts, and what remedy, if any, can be made available.

Mr. WEAVER. The Commissioner has already made such inquiries during the past year.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. He has been doing this without being specially authorized.

It simply enlarges the scope of information embraced in the first and fifth sections.

Mr. WEAVER. It does not make it an Executive Department.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No; it does not make it an Executive Department.

Mr. WEAVER. Simply places it on a footing with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes; that is all. It simply places the Bureau of Labor on the same footing with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WEAVER. No Cabinet officer.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No Cabinet officer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Does it provide for an assistant?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I think under the present law the chief clerk is the assistant commissioner.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is not so.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes; the chief clerk, I think, at present acts as assistant commissioner.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill had better be debated somewhat generally. I do not desire to debate the bill myself, but I do desire information in reference to just what it covers and how far it reaches. I do not know the expense of the present Bureau of Labor. The Commissioner of that Bureau gets a salary of $3,000 a year and the chief clerk a salary of $2,000. What other expenses there may be I do not know.

This bill provides for a Commissioner of Labor, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum, for which I am prepared to vote. I do not think it is too much salary for a gentleman at the head of such an important bureau. It also provides—

That there shall be an assistant commissioner at a salary of $3,000 per annum.

I do not think that is too high a salary, and am prepared to vote for it. Then the bill provides for—

One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,500 per annum; four clerks of class 4, all to be statistical experts; five clerks of class 3, one of whom may be a stenographer; six clerks of class 2, one of whom may be a translator and one of whom may be a stenographer; eight clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 per annum; one disbursing clerk, who shall also have charge of accounts, at a salary of $1,800 per annum; two copyists, at $900 each per annum; two copyists, at $720 each per annum; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one watchman; two assistant watchmen; two skilled laborers, at $600 each per annum; two charwomen, at $240 each per annum; six special agents, at $1,600 each per annum; ten special agents, at $1,400 each per annum; four special agents, at $1,200 each per annum; and such temporary experts, assistants, and other employés as Congress may from time to time provide, with compensation corresponding to that of similar officers and employés in other Departments of the Government.

Now, it seems to me my friend from Missouri is mistaken that it is better to discuss those provisions of the bill under the five-minute rule than in some general debate, which will show the House what is to be the expense of this new department so abundantly officered and it seems to me so extensively officered. The Bureau of Labor is now doing good work.

Mr. WEAVER. There are in the present Bureau of Labor within four persons of the number designated in this bill, and the labor is on the increase all the time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. My friend [Mr. WEAVER] says, and I do not question it, that this bill provides for within four of the number now employed in the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not mean to say there are constantly employed that number in the present bureau, but that from time to time the number employed is within four of the number provided for in this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What I desire for the committee and for myself is some statement by the Committee on Labor, who examined this bill, to show to the committee with some clearness of detail, some comparison of detail, the present force and the proposed force.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to cal his attention to a general suggestion?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. With pleasure.

Mr. LONG. If you will turn to section 7, it provides:

SEC. 7. That the Commissioner of Labor, in accordance with the general design and duties referred to in section 1 of this act, is specially charged to ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production, and under a classification showing the different elements of cost or approximate cost of such articles of production. He shall also establish a system of reports by which, at intervals of not less than two years, he can report the general condition, so far as production is concerned, of the leading industries of the country.

I am inclined to think that broadens a good deal the present work of the Bureau of Labor. One vital object of our census report is to furnish every ten years such information; but that is not sufficient. This provides for such report being made at intervals of not less than two years.

The next census will not be had until 1890. The object of this provision is that there may be practically an industrial census every second year; not with the detail and minutiæ of the present census, but full enough to give valuable information to the country. I can see at once that that provision of the bill would necessarily enlarge the official force and personnel of the bureau.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If my friend from Massachusetts, whose interruption I was glad to have, will permit me to interrupt him, I wish to say that I am not opposing the bill.

Mr. LONG. I understood that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. For, so far as I can judge from the examination I have been able to give to the bill and from having it read, I am disposed to favor it. I only desired to know from some person who had investigated the subject what difference in cost was involved.

Mr. LONG. I think, of course, that fact should be known, but wanted only to call attention to some general suggestions as embodied in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The cost of the Bureau of Labor was $105,000. It had an appropriation of $95,000, and the balance of the appropriation comes from the Department of the Interior. The department of labor as organized by this bill will cost $150,000. It provides for the old organization, and this adds some ten experts as assistants to the eighteen, I think, special agents to obtain information.

Mr. LONG. This industrial information.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. But they are not constantly employed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. These are to aid the department in ascertaining and reporting upon the facts necessary to prepare the reports required.

Mr. MILLS. Has this bill been submitted to the Commissioner of Labor?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir; and the estimates were prepared by him.

Mr. MILLS. For his indorsement would add largely to my opinion of the bill. I regard him as a most skillful man, and what he recommends would be entitled to consideration by the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And the bill came last from his hands with his entire approval. All the estimates were prepared by him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. By Mr. Wright?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir; by Mr. Wright himself.

Mr. MILLS. What is the aggregate of the estimated expense?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. He says it will aggregate $150,000.

Mr. MILLS. And this is to cover the cost of procuring and collating this information?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETERS. The expert agents are not now provided for by law?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. These are in addition to those already provided by law. He requires additional force to get this information.

Mr. WEAVER. This adds four to the number now employed.

Mr. PETERS. This enlarges the scope of the present law?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir. It makes a separate and distinct department, the same as the present Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LONG. And gives a summary of industrial progress and development every two years for public information.

Mr. COCKRAN. It makes, in other words, a department of industrial statistics.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And puts this information before the laboring masses of the country.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, an inquiry was made a few moments ago as to the Commissioner of Labor, Carroll D. Wright. All I have to say is this, that Colonel Wright was the commissioner of labor of the State of Massachusetts. We all know him in that relation. He took the census of Massachusetts according to their State mode of taking it. He has been here two or three years in this city, in connection with this business, and his labors are familiar to all gentlemen around me.

But to any one who has worked, as I have to some extent, in connection with the census—our own Federal census—I wish to say that I have never known a man who could give more information in relation to matters connected with the enumeration of the people and their resources, their various industries, and all the social science growing out of the census and matters statistical, than Col. Carroll D. Wright. I say this because before I knew him, before he came to Washington, I had the preparation, to a great extent, of the decennial census, and called upon his volume and drew from it many and valuable suggestions in connection with the last preceding census, so that the census bill thus prepared passed through the House almost nem. con., with only two hours of debate, whereas the preceding census bill, ten years prior to that, was debated for two months and then failed in the Senate, because somehow or other we had not the counsel, information, and advice of a man whose information is so valuable and complete as our present Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed, and that we proceed to consider the bill by sections.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that is done I desire to be heard for a moment or two.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish simply to call attention to the present law, the act of 1884, under which this bureau was organized. I ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to establish a Bureau of Labor.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Labor, which shall be under the charge of a Commissioner of Labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Commissioner of Labor shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed, and shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year. The Commissioner shall collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, and the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity. The Secretary of the Interior, upon the recommendation of said Commissioner, shall appoint a chief clerk, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and such other employés as may be necessary for the said bureau: Provided, That the total expense shall not exceed $25,000 per annum. During the necessary absence of the Commissioner, or when the office shall become vacant, the chief clerk shall perform the duties of Commissioner. The Commissioner shall annually make a report in writing to the Secretary of the Interior of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the bureau.

Approved June 27, 1884.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have asked that the present law may be read simply for the purpose of showing the origin of the proposed measure.

That act did not present the subject in the breadth of importance that it now assumes. The sum of $25,000 was made the limit of expense. The salary of the Commissioner was placed at $3,000, and the salary of the chief clerk at $2,000, who was to act as deputy commissioner if the office of Commissioner was vacant, or if the Commissioner was absent. But we proceeded at once to appropriate a much larger sum than $25,000. The appropriations have run up to something over $100,000. A portion of the increase resulted from additional duties devolved upon the Commissioner by law in connection with the census, etc. This required an increase of appropriation.

It is now proposed to increase the salary of the Commissioner to $5,000, to fix the salary of the deputy commissioner at $3,000, and to have a chief clerk at $2,500. There is then an enumeration of a number of other employés who were not provided for by the former law.

It seems to me the present law has some merits above the proposed measure, particularly as to the appropriations in gross. I have not hitherto been in favor of such appropriations and have generally opposed them. But in regard to this particular bureau, looking at the character of duties performed, it occurred to me at the beginning, and it occurs to me still, that it is better to name the Commissioner, the deputy commissioner, and the chief clerk, and appropriate for them as in the last four years, and then fix a sum in gross, which has been estimated heretofore by the Secretary of the Interior, and hereafter would be estimated by the Commissioner of Labor, so that he may apply the money in such manner as will more directly accomplish the purpose he has in view.

I think it occasionally occurs that an appropriation in gross for a given bureau, or even for a given service in a Department, is found to be very beneficial. I admit you confer upon the head of a Department or the head of a bureau, especially the head of a Department, the power to fix salaries; but in some instances that is found to be beneficial and in many cases in the interest of economy as well as of the efficiency of the Department. I myself would prefer seeing the basis on which this is done perpetuated, even if the salaries were increased and the duties enlarged, rather than to see the plan proposed by this bill carried out of going into detail.

In connection with the proposed salary of the Commissioner and in regard to the duties performed up to this time I wish to say this, that that bureau, considering the time it has been in operation, has been a very successful one. It has been, I think, eminently successful. The very accomplished gentleman at the head of it entered upon his duties fully armed and equipped; he understood in all its details the subjects which would come under his control as head of the bureau. The results up to this time, I think, have been entirely satisfactory. And I do not hesitate to say that whatever change we may make will not render the bureau more efficient unless to the extent that we enlarge the scope of the inquiry. I think the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts clearly indicated that.

It is proposed to increase the salaries. That is according to our usual experience. I am not complaining particularly of this salary of $5,000 for what I look upon as the eminent qualifications of the gentleman who now fills the office. I am not complaining of this as too large a salary for the high qualities a gentleman should possess who fills such an office. But we are departing rapidly from the old landmarks.

The present Commissioner of the Land Office receives $4,500 a year, although there is no bureau of this Government perhaps which is of equal importance. I believe the Commissioner of Pensions receives $5,000; several others do so. I am not complaining particularly about that.

It seems to me, however, that for a bureau like this there is no necessity for a deputy. In the course of four years you provide for a deputy with the same general powers and the same salary as you conferred on the head of the bureau when it was established. But I do not apprehend my views on this subject, considering the rapidity with which we drift in these matters, would be entirely satisfactory.

Still, I wish to suggest to my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that the appropriation proposed here is $150,000, and it would probably be beyond that limit in two years. I am not going to complain about it. But I venture to say if you divide that sum up in accordance with a classification of clerks, experts, and other employés you will not get as efficient service and will do it at a larger expense than if you make an appropriation of the sum in gross.

Mr. WEAVER. When this follows the whole range of the investigation, how can it be inefficient?

Mr. HOLMAN. The question of efficiency will depend altogether upon the power of the Commissioner in securing efficient service. We have done this same thing in other branches of the service. The Supervising Architect's Office of the Treasury Department is upon the same basis, and so is the Geological Survey.

Mr. WEAVER. We do not appropriate for the Agricultural Department in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. No.

Mr. WEAVER. Yet we have very efficient service there.

Mr. HOLMAN. But we do it in all those fields where scientific attainments are important. It is done in the two cases I have mentioned, in the case of the Supervising Architect's Office and in the case of the Geological Survey, and, from the examination I have made of the expenditures of those two bureaus, I am inclined to believe that the present method of appropriation is the best. As a general thing I have steadily protested against conferring upon the heads of Departments, even, much less upon the heads of bureaus, the power to appropriate money. I have always insisted that that should be under the control of Congress. But I should be glad to see an exception made here. I would provide for a Commissioner, a deputy commissioner, if necessary—although I do not think it is necessary—and a chief clerk, and then I would make an appropriation of a sum in gross, as we have done for the last four years. If we follow that course I indulge the belief that as long as we keep a thoroughly competent man at the head of that bureau we shall find it to be the most efficient and economical method of carrying on that service.

Mr. MILLS. Have we made provision here for the traveling expenses of these special agents?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all embraced in the gross sum. The estimate I have from the committee states that this figure embraces the entire cost of the service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention of Missouri's——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, (sotto voce). Favorite son. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] to the fact that this bill does not abolish the present system.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, yes, it does, in section 9.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is no objection to dispense with general debate and have the bill read by sections.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the department of labor shall be under the charge of a commissioner of labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; he shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be an assistant commissioner of labor, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed, and who shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. MCADOO. I move to amend section 2, by adding after the word "Senate," in line 8, the following:

Who shall be an expert statistician and.

So that as amended, the provision will read:

There shall also be an assistant commissioner of labor, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be an expert statistician, and who shall hold his office, etc.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I do not wish to delay or hinder it in any way, but I want to say a word in favor of this amendment. I find that the third section of the bill provides four clerks of class 4 who are to be statistical experts. Now, in my opinion, it would be impossible to get men who would be statistical experts of any value if they were to be classed as clerks of class 4. In other words, if it is intended that there shall be assistants to the chief of this bureau who shall be really and in truth statistical experts, we must pay them reasonable salaries, and the only salary mentioned in this bill that is at all commensurate with the value of the services of a statistical expert is that of the assistant of the chief.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman will look at the last four lines of section 3, he will find that it provides for a compensation to "experts, assistants, and other employés corresponding to that of similar officers and employés in other Departments of the Government."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes. The language is, "and such temporary experts, assistants, and other employés as Congress may from time to time provide, with compensation corresponding to that of similar officers and employés in other Departments of the Government."

Mr. MCADOO. Well, Mr. Chairman, I had not noticed the very sweeping wording of that provision. The gentleman will see, however, that the bill makes provision for four clerks who are to be statistical experts.

Mr. REED. I should think it would be well enough to leave the appointment of the assistant commissioner to depend upon his general qualifications for the office, and if it be found necessary to have a statistical expert, I have no doubt that one will be selected for that place.

Mr. MCADOO. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not insist upon the amendment. I withdraw it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to amend section 2 by striking out the words:

There shall also be an assistant commissioner of labor, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed, and who shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, the office proposed to be created by this clause which

I have moved to erase from the bill is a new office. At present we have a Commissioner and a chief clerk, with a provision of law that the chief clerk shall perform the duties of Commissioner during the absence or disability of that officer. When the great Departments of our Government—the Department of Foreign Affairs, as it was then called (now the Department of State), the Treasury Department, and the War Department—were first organized, we had at the head of each a Secretary, with a chief clerk. Upon this clerk devolved the possession of the books and papers of the Department, together with the temporary control of its business during the absence or disability of the principal officer. That early arrangement has been superseded under the necessities of modern times. We have now in our Departments, on account of the pressure of public business, assistant secretaries in the several branches of administration.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman will allow me to say that there is not even now any assistant secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Nor of War.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If, by reason of the pressure of business or the important character of the duties imposed on this Department of Labor, it should appear that an assistant commissioner is indispensable, Congress can hereafter provide such an assistant, as it has already provided an assistant secretary in most of the Executive Departments of the Government. But, having established this branch of administration with a Commissioner and a chief clerk, I think it would be well for us to restrain our hands before creating this new office. This bill will increase the salary of the Commissioner to $5,000; and the salary of the chief clerk will be increased from $2,000 to $2,500. I am informed that the present incumbents of these positions are very competent and able men, no doubt competent and able enough for the performance of all the duties of their respective offices, without the employment of this assistant as proposed by the bill in the clause which I have moved to strike out.

Of course, if this amendment be adopted, it will require the modification of a subsequent section, where the assistant commissioner is charged with the performance of the duties of the Commissioner during the necessary absence of that officer.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If in order to do so, I will accept, on behalf of the committee, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW].

The amendment of Mr. BUCKALEW was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That there shall be in the department of labor, to be appointed by the commissioner of labor: One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,500 per annum; four clerks of class 4, all to be statistical experts; five clerks of class 3, one of whom may be a stenographer; six clerks of class 2, one of whom may be a translator and one of whom may be a stenographer; eight clerks of class 1; five clerks at $1,000 per annum; one disbursing clerk, who shall also have charge of accounts at a salary of $1,800 per annum; two copyists at $900 each per annum; two copyists at $720 each per annum; one messenger, one assistant messenger, one watchman, two assistant watchmen, two skilled laborers, at $600 each per annum; two charwomen at $240 each per annum; six special agents at $1,600 each per annum; ten special agents at $1,400 each per annum; four special agents at $1,200 each per annum, and such temporary experts, assistants, and other employés as Congress may from time to time provide, with compensation corresponding to that of similar officers and employés in other Departments of the Government.

Mr. LAWLER. I would like to make an inquiry. I see that lines 11 and 12 of this section provide for "two copyists at $900 each per annum" and "two copyists at $720 each per annum." What is the reason for the distinction in point of salary?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is the way the copyists are classified in the Department.

Mr. LAWLER. I am satisfied that the copyists receiving the lower salaries do just as much work as those receiving the higher salaries, and oftentimes more.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. CRAIN. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 5 and 7, the word "may" and inserting the word "shall."

The first amendment of Mr. CRAIN, to strike out "may," in line 5, and insert "shall," so as to read "five clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be a stenographer," was agreed to.

The question recurring on the second amendment of Mr. CRAIN, it was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out "may" and insert "shall;" so as to read "six clerks of class 2, one of whom may be a translator, and one of whom shall be a stenographer."

Mr. BLAND. I do not see why we should not leave this matter to the discretion of the Department. I think this amendment ought not to be adopted. Certainly the officer in charge of this department would be the best judge under the circumstances as to whether a translator or a stenographer should be employed.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to amend by striking out, in line 13, the words "one assistant messenger," and in line 14, "two assistant watchmen."

Mr. WARNER. Is the gentleman sincere in that amendment?

Mr. McCOMAS. I am entirely sincere. These terms "assistant messenger" and "assistant watchman" are unknown to the law; they are grades or degrees of employment which ought not to appear in a statute. They hurt the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Does the gentleman propose merely to strike out the word "assistant?"

Mr. McCOMAS. You can provide, if you choose, one messenger or two messengers, one watchman or three watchmen.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We had better provide for two messengers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it will be found that the offices of assistant messenger and assistant watchman are provided for by law. They do not receive the same salaries as messengers and watchmen.

Mr. PETERS. What is the difference between the duties of watchman and those of an assistant watchman?

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps there is no difference in the character of the duties; but there is a difference in the salary.

Mr. PETERS. If the service performed by the two classes of officers is the same, why should they not receive the same pay?

Mr. HOLMAN. The responsibility, I presume, is not so great in the one case as in the other.

Mr. PETERS. I think the distinction is purely artificial.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not see that this is a very momentous question, or that it is necessary for us to spend much time in discussing the designations which shall be given to these officers. It does seem to be, however, essential that there should be two messengers, whether one be called an assistant or not. If we strike out the provision for one assistant messenger we ought to provide for two messengers, so that when one is absent on duty the other would be subject to call. So far as regards the watchmen, there is a necessity for three of these officers, for the duty performed by them is required during the day as well as at night; and under the provisions of the eight-hour law, though only one should be on duty at one time, three would be required, as there are twenty-four hours in the day. Three times eight are twenty-four! [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS'S amendments were disagreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to direct attention to section 3, lines 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, which provide for—

Six special agents, at $1,600 each per annum; ten special agents, at $1,400 each per annum; four special agents, at $1,200 each per annum.

Now, it is impossible to employ special agents at that price, if they have to pay their traveling expenses and subsistence themselves. I think there should be a provision such as this: "Allowance for subsistence and traveling expenses as the Commissioner may prescribe."

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that the usual course is for the Committee on Appropriations to make the appropriation for such purposes.

Mr. WEAVER. I think it is proper and necessary in considering this bill at this time to make it perfect in all its provisions. We should not only provide for the officers necessary to carry on this department, but we should also provide for the appropriation of the necessary amounts for the efficiency and success of the department. I insist on my amendment. After the words "per annum" I move to insert the words "and such allowance for traveling expenses and subsistence as may be prescribed by the Commissioner."

In support of that amendment let me suggest that unless there is some provision of that sort in the organic act I doubt whether the Committee on Appropriations would have authority to make appropriation. At all events I moved the amendment to relieve any doubt on the subject.

A MEMBER. It would be much better to lessen the number of these special agents.

Mr. WEAVER. No; that is the best part of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The Commissioner has the right now.

Mr. LONG. Inasmuch as this bill has had the scrutiny of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor, is it worth while to increase these salaries?

Mr. WEAVER. This does not increase these salaries.

Mr. LONG. It does practically.

Mr. WEAVER. He now pays $3 a day for traveling expenses and subsistence. It seems to me there ought to be some provision in the organic act so there may be no doubt with the Committee on Appropriations about the propriety and necessity of making this appropriation for the support of the department of labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will be read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. WEAVER. It seems to me there ought to be no objection to having that included in the organic act, so there may be no doubt about the appropriation for this purpose hereafter by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. This bill, I understand, was submitted to the Commissioner of Labor, and I think he has wisely approved of it as it is. There has long been a conflict between the two systems of appropriating for expenses, and I think experience has shown the mode adopted of giving a certain per diem instead of an amount of $3 a day for traveling expenses is much better than the mode this would continue. It is the system which the present Commissioner of Labor approves. It seems to be the system generally adopted and preferred by the heads of the several Departments. It is preferred certainly by the Commissioner of Labor; and no good reason in the world can be given for the change which the amendment proposes.

Mr. WEAVER. I merely wish to say a word in reply to what has been stated by the gentleman from Alabama. The estimate includes these $3 a day for traveling expenses and subsistence. So then it does not enlarge the estimates.

Mr. MILLS. Have the present agents this allowance?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Do they receive $3 a day?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; $3 a day for subsistence and traveling expenses. It is in the estimate, but not in the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand that when the bill says—

With compensation corresponding to that of similar officers and employés in other Departments of the Government—

it means $3 per day and expenses. That is the method of compensation adopted and approved generally after long experience in every other Department, and I do not see any reason for departing from it in this case.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about the provision of the bill, if he will permit me to state. It provides, after the semicolon in the twentieth line:

And such temporary experts, assistants, and other employés as Congress may from time to time provide, with compensation corresponding to that of similar officers and employés in other Departments of the Government.

That has reference only to the temporary experts, who are to have that compensation, and not to the permanent officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa let me call his attention to the fact that there is no appropriation in this bill at all, to begin with? The tenth section provides—

That on the passage of this act the commissioner of labor shall at once submit estimates for the expenses of the department of labor for the next fiscal year, giving in detail the number and salaries of officers and employés therein.

I do not think it is necessary that a provision like this should be adopted. It has never been adopted in the creation of an office of this class, unless it was done by an appropriation bill. You have, for instance, five Indian inspectors, five Indian agents, and two land inspectors in the Interior Department, and there is no provision of law providing for this expense except in the current appropriation bill. But if the gentleman from Iowa wishes to make this very specific, I will suggest to him the addition of this language—

And expenses when employed away from the department.

Mr. MILLS. That is, the special agents?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. That is the effect of the amendment now.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, they may be employed at the office here.

Mr. MILLS. Not the special agents.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, they might be employed right here about the department. There are several special agents employed here in this city now.

I do not think you ought to impose upon the Commissioner the power of fixing what the compensation should be. I think that should be determined by Congress and appropriation made for it in proper form.

Mr. WEAVER. That is the very effect of the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will send up his amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the proposed amendment:
"And expenses when employed away from the department."

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I accept that.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not think that meets the point at all.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Iowa also to a modification of this amendment which I think will be acceptable to both. I suggest its adoption in this form: Insert in line 20, after the words "per annum," the following:

And an allowance to special agents for traveling expenses not to exceed $3 per day while actually employed in the field and outside of the District of Columbia, exclusive of actual transportation, including sleeping-car fare.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? Why can not this section be permitted to stand just as the Commissioner of Labor prepared it himself?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not objecting to that. My amendment was to a pending amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. The Commissioner of Labor may have made an omission, and I think he did.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not objecting to this provision as it is.

Mr. WEAVER. Well, let us accept the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it expresses the intention fully. It ought not to specify the rate of compensation.

Mr. RYAN. I think it is very proper to specify the rate. It is done in all of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I withdraw my amendment also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment of Mr. McCOMAS was again read, and adopted.

Section 4 was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That during the necessary absence of the commissioner, or when the office shall become vacant, the assistant commissioner shall perform the duties of commissioner, and in the absence of both the commissioner and the assistant commissioner the chief clerk shall perform such duties.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to strike out that section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that I move to amend the section by a substitute which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for section 4:
"That during the necessary absence of the commissioner, or when the office shall become vacant, the chief clerk shall perform the duties of commissioner."

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to strike out the section.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. We ought not to charge the responsibility of that office upon a chief clerk. The chief clerk may act temporarily, as a matter of course, in the absence of the commissioner, to answer questions and take control of such temporary duties as may be imposed upon him in such absence; but to have him assume the responsibilities of the office I think would be as unsafe as it is entirely unnecessary.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, to strike out the section as amended, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the commissioner of labor, in accordance with the general design and duties referred to in section 1 of this act, is specially charged to ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production, and under a classification showing the different elements of cost, or approximate cost, of such articles of production. He shall also establish a system of reports by which, at intervals of not less than two years, he can report the general condition, so far as production is concerned, of the leading industries of the country. The commissioner of labor is also specially charged to investigate the causes of and facts relating to all controversies and disputes between employers and employés as they may occur, and which may tend to interfere with the welfare of the people of the different States, and report thereon to Congress. The commissioner of labor shall also obtain such information upon the various foreign nations.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

After the word "various," in line 19, insert "subjects committed to him as he may deem desirable from different;" so that it shall read:
"The commissioner of labor shall also obtain such information upon the various subjects committed to him as he may deem desirable from different foreign nations."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after section 7, the following:
"SEC. 8. That the commissioner of labor shall also investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic in relation to revenue and taxation and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, public health, and the general welfare of the people; and also inquire and report as to the practical results of legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the United States."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I make the point of order that that is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill. We have a committee specially for the purpose of dealing with the liquor traffic. I hope the gentleman from Maine will not seek to encumber the bill with such an amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. My principal point of order is that I do not want the gentleman to bring into the bill an amendment which may defeat it on account of the lateness of the hour in which we are considering the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make a further point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine is a distinct section, and we should perfect section 7 before we pass from it. I have an amendment to section 7 which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for the purpose of offering his amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 7 by striking out, after the word "at," in line 3, down to the word "also," in line 9, namely, these words:
"Is specially charged to ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production, and under a classification showing the different elements of cost, or approximate cost, of such articles of production. He shall also."

Mr. BUCHANAN. The reason why I offer this amendment is this: The words proposed to be stricken out require the Commissioner of Labor to ascertain certain things in leading countries abroad. We already have a system by which these matters may be ascertained in our consular reports. Reports on these matters are made from time to time by our consular agents and consuls, and are published by our State Department.

To effectuate the provision which I propose to strike out it will be necessary for the Commissioner of Labor to send his agents through all the producing countries in the world, and the expense will be simply enormous. It will load down the department with such expense that I am afraid it will become so great that the American Congress will refuse longer to appropriate for the purpose of maintaining the department.

It seems to me this work can be done through the agencies already established without incumbering the department of labor with this special work; because if the work is to be done accurately at all it will have to be done by men upon the spot; and to send men there for this particular purpose and pay their traveling expenses and contingent expenses must result in a largely increased cost. The machinery is already provided by which this work can be done, and I do not believe we are friends of the bill if we insist upon saddling this additional matter upon the Commissioner.

If it was simply proposed that he should tabulate and publish the reports gleaned abroad by our agents I should not object. But the whole matter is put in his charge; you discard the present agencies and compel the Commissioner to send his own men to the sources of information.

Mr. WEAVER. I suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that the Commissioner can only use the agents provided in the act, and can not increase the limit of cost.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I will say that with the limited force provided in this act it will be simply impossible for the Commissioner to perform the labor imposed upon him by this provision, which I ask to have stricken out.

Mr. FELTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Jersey if he thinks the consular reports as now presented are reliable?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the consular reports as they are at the present time or as they were in the past. I know in some instances they are accurate and in some instances grossly inaccurate. But I know if men on the spot can not in every instance be accurate, men in the city of Washington certainly can not be accurate as to matters in Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Mr. FELTON. Might it not be a good thing to send these men abroad so that the reports may be accurate?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If we do that it will be necessary to increase the force and expense of this bureau to such an extent that I am afraid Congress will refuse longer to appropriate for its support.

Already matters have been laid upon this bureau that have no legitimate connection with its duties. Already the Commissioner is authorized, or rather directed, by a law of Congress to gather statistics upon the subject of divorce, and the money that is appropriated in the interest of labor for the purpose of carrying on this bureau is diverted in that way from its legitimate uses. Of course, there are a thousand investigations and inquiries that could be put upon the Commissioner, and that would lead to interesting results, but which have no legitimate connection with the duties of his office.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I supposed that this was a bill looking somewhat to the improvement of the position of the wage-workers throughout this country. Coming from the Committee on Labor and advocated as a bill of that kind, it does seem to me that the very object of the bill shows the necessity of this proposed investigation. We want to ascertain whether the cost of the production of the articles that labor consumes is not such that the chief share of the profit goes to the manufacturers, the monopolists, the syndicates, and that labor does not get its proper share. If we want to bring about a state of things where men will need to labor only eight hours a day, we must pay the laborer better than he is paid at present. If this investigation can show, as I believe it will show, that the workingman is not getting the benefit of the laws pretended to be enacted in his interest and for his protection, that he is not getting his due share of the profits of production, then it will serve a very useful purpose.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important items, I will say the most important, in this bill. If this item is to be stricken out of the bill there is very little else in it that is worth retaining. I know that the Commissioner of Labor has been wanting this appropriation to pay these special agents to go through our own country and through the countries of Europe and gather up this information about the cost of production, in order to lay before the American people the true facts of that matter. We have been told here and are being continually told that the wages of labor on the other side of the ocean are so much less than the wages of labor on this side that the cost of production in foreign countries is lower than it is here. Who knows the truth of that proposition? Who knows whether it is true or not?

Now, sir, here is the test of it. Let our Commissioner of Labor send out his special agents—men thoroughly equipped for this work; let us give him the money to send them out to get the facts and make trustworthy reports upon the units of production, as to the labor cost, as to the material cost, as to all the elements of cost. Then when we come before the country to legislate upon these questions we can not deceive our laboring people by telling them that certain legislation is for their benefit, for they will be enabled to see for themselves whether the labor cost of production of any given article is or is not greater in Europe than it is in this country, and whether or not all the benefit of the duties imposed by the tariff upon articles imported into this country does not go into the pockets of the protected manufacturer.

Now then, gentlemen, come up to the scratch. Come up and have these matters investigated. Let us see what the cost of production is; let us see what part of it labor gets; let us see whether the cheaper labor on the other side of the ocean can compete with the higher-priced and more efficient labor on this side. Do not run away from the proposition. Do not aim to strike out the very heart of this bill and then feed our laboring people upon mere promises that your tariff legislation is intended for their benefit when every dime of it is intended for the benefit of the "trusts" that are organized in different parts of the country.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, no; that is all humbug.

Mr. REED. If the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means had that information, I wonder whether he would be willing to have it read to the committee? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I had no idea, sir, of raising such an excitement in the House by the amendment which I offered. I had no idea that it would precipitate a tariff debate on the part of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and bring to the front, clad in all the panoply of war, the leader of this House. I am glad that he is hungering and thirsting for information. I hope that he will get it. I hope that he will get his satisfaction of it.

I am glad he is hungering and thirsting for information. I hope he will get it to his satisfaction, and get it in legitimate ways. I do not object to the procuring of any information with respect to the cost of producing articles in any other country; and not a word that I said would justly subject me to such an imputation. I simply said that we had the means provided now for procuring the information, and that we could use those means without additional expense. I protested against placing this burden upon the Bureau of Labor; and the very excitement which this proposition has produced shows that there is another reason why we should keep this provision out of the bill. If the very mention of the thing precipitates a political discussion in this House, then if the provision be inserted in the bill, you have the Bureau of Labor made simply a political foot-ball, to be kicked hither and thither by free-trade advocates on the one side, and protection advocates on the other. I want to preserve the bureau from the possibility of that. I have nothing more to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey withdraw his pro forma amendment to strike out the last word?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, yes; I have no particular antipathy to that last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], which has already been read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to amend by inserting at the appropriate place the words "and the wages paid respectively." We are all interested in the question of labor in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicate in what line he wishes the words inserted?

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment might be made plainer by inserting at the end of the sentence the words "including wages paid."

Mr. MILLS. It should read "wages paid by the day, week, month, or year, or by the piece."

Mr. WASHINGTON. And we should also insert the words "and the cost of living."

Mr. RANDALL. The constituents of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] would not want to live as the laboring people do abroad.

I modify my amendment so as to insert after the word "production," in line 9, the words "including the wages paid in such industries."

Mr. MILLS. It should read, "wages paid per day, week, month, or year, or by the piece." Let those words be put in.

Mr. RYAN. The proposition covers all kinds of wages.

Mr. BRUMM. The more specific the language is made the more it is restricted.

Mr. MILLS. I do not want anybody to be deceived. Gentlemen should not object to getting all the light they can on these questions.

Mr. RANDALL. We want to know the difference between the wages paid in Europe and those paid in the United States for similar service.

Mr. MILLS. And we want to know the difference in the productive power of labor in Europe and in this country. If a man in this country does five times as much work in a day as a man does in Europe, and only gets twice as much money, the man in this country is the cheaper worker of the two.

Mr. RANDALL. We do not want to philosophize about a matter of this kind.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The Ways and Means Committee ought to know all about that before this time.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have all the information we can get.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was modified by adding the amendment proposed by Mr. MILLS.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHING-

TON] suggested an amendment, to insert the words "and the cost of living."

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by adding "and the hours employed per day."

The amendment of Mr. MCKINLEY was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. RANDALL as modified and amended, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move a further amendment, to insert at the end of the section the following:

And what, if any, convict-made goods are imported into this country, and if so, from whence.

Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "production," in line 9, the words "and the profits of the manufacturers and producers of such articles in this country."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment already agreed to by the committee has been inserted after the word "production," in the ninth line.

Mr. BLAND. Then I offer this to come in after that amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment by striking out "in this country," so as to make this investigation apply to foreign countries.

Mr. BLAND. That is not what we want at all; we want to know what the profits are in this country.

Mr. BRUMM. Apply it to all alike.

Mr. BLAND. We want to expose them. I have no objection to take in the profits of all, but I do object to striking that out; let us have the investigation not only in the other countries, but in this.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Let us do something; let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. BLAND'S amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the following amendment, to come in after section 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Commissioner of Labor shall also investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection to pauperism, crime, social vice, and public health and general welfare of the people; and also inquire and report as to the practical results of legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the United States.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I rise to a point of order. I offered an amendment to the preceding section, which was not received, although I was trying to be recognized for that purpose. Now the gentleman from Maine offers an amendment as an additional section. I insist that it is not in order until all amendments have been disposed of to section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine was moved to the seventh section; but the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to move his amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I move to add to the amendment just adopted "and the comparative cost of living."

Mr. MILLIKEN. I should like to have inserted the words "and the kind of living."

Mr. WASHINGTON. I move my amendment to what has already been adopted and added to the seventh section.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I insist on an amendment to the amendment, to insert the words "and the kind of living."

The amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY. I now insist upon my amendment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to ascertain some information as to the protective tariff. I send up an amendment to be inserted after the one just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner also to ascertain and report as to the effect of the tariff of the United States on the agricultural industries, especially as to its effect on mortgage indebtedness on farmers.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have offered this amendment in the utmost good faith. We have heard from the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] more than once that the mortgage indebtedness on farmers in ten States of the Ohio and Missouri Valleys equals in the aggregate the immense sum of $3,500,000,000. He no doubt received his information from the partisan press of the country. The truth is, from the investigation made by Mr. Atkinson, a free-trader, I believe, certainly a gentleman of distinction, and when it comes to matter of statistics eminently fair, instead of this indebtedness aggregating $3,500,000,000 it is $1,093,000,000, or less than a third of the tremendous sum which has been paraded before the country in this House. Why, if it were true the farmers of those ten States were mortgaged to the extent of $3,500,000,000 it would be in excess of the aggregate value of all the real estate of all those ten States, including that of town and city. The statement contradicts itself. I have referred to the census of 1880.

In one of the newspapers I find that the farmers in my own State are indebted by mortgage to the extent of $620,000,000; and yet the entire real estate in Indiana is only assessed—or was in 1880, according to the census—at $550,000,000. Our farmers therefore are only indebted $70,000,000 more than the value of the entire real estate in the State. I want this Commissioner of Labor to ascertain if that is the condition of Indiana, and if it is I want to move into Missouri, where they have free trade and Bland silver dollars. [Laughter.] I shall want to get out of Indiana if that be true.

I assume that this statement is really unsupported by facts. I assert that it has been paraded here for the purpose of frightening somebody upon some subject; and it is to ascertain the exact truth in this case that I ask that this inquiry may be enlarged to that extent by this bureau.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Before the gentleman from Indiana takes his seat let me ask him a question. If the farmers have been able to borrow such an amount of money as has been suggested upon these mortgages, have they not succeeded in selling their farms at remarkably good prices?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes, sir; and more than they could sell them for in the market.

It has also been stated in the same connection that farmers, because of the operation of protection or the "robbery of the tariff," or because of the havoc and ruin it has made in regard to the industries of the United States, are compelled to pay 10 and 12 per cent. interest, when if we had free trade, with all of its attendant blessings, we are assured they could get money possibly for nothing, and some would probably be willing to pay them a reasonable rate of interest for taking care of it. I undertake to say that the farmers in my section of the country in Indiana can now borrow all the money they want, all they need, at 6 per cent., and there never was a time in the history of this country when the great Northwest, at least my section of it, found money so cheap, when the farm credits were better, and when the farming industry was more prosperous.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the reading of the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting:

"And what articles are now controlled by trusts, and what effect said trusts have had on limiting production and keeping up prices."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, if what I have said heretofore has had the effect of calling the attention of the country, and especially my friend on the other side of the House, to the condition of the agricultural classes in this Union, I think I have performed my duty in this House.

The statistics that I gave, sir, purport to have been collated by farm papers, Granger organizations, and other sources, which I assume to be qualified to gather such information. When I published the statement I stated at the same time that I did not know myself as to the correctness of it, but that the figures were appalling; and even though one-half or one-third of the indebtedness only was true it was enough for the people of this country to begin to ascertain for themselves the cause and the remedy.

Now, when the gentleman admits that over one billion of dollars (if I understood him correctly he said nearly two billions), but if one billion of dollars of indebtedness is placed like a blanket upon the farms of those States as mortgages, and yet says that the farming and agricultural interests are not languishing, but are prosperous, and that his constituents are in a better condition than they have ever been before and can procure money upon their farms at a lower rate of interest, I have but this to say, that the interest on money being low is no indication of such prosperity, but is an indication simply of low prices everywhere and the inability of money to find circulation and to find borrowers or investment because of the stagnation of business, and because it is impossible to loan money or for people to borrow it and make anything out of it. I hope that the farmers of this country, in the discussion of this question here, will be informed upon it.

I yield the floor to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a few remarks in response to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]. I have no doubt of his sincerity in everything he has said; but I have investigated this question and have endeavored to be as accurate in my investigation as it was possible to be.

During the past summer I traveled this country from Western New York, through portions of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, and the very best testimony I could procure discloses the fact that two-thirds of all the farms in the United States and Territories are under mortgages. According to the Tenth Census we had, in 1880, 539,000,000 acres of cultivated farms. Let us concede that it amounts to 600,000,000 acres now. Now, if two-thirds of this farm area is under mortgage, the encumbered land amounts to 400,000,000 acres.

Mr. FARQUHAR rose.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no time to yield.

I say that estimate can not be overthrown. Four hundred millions of acres, and that amounts to 625,000 square miles of cultivated land, that are under mortgage in this country; and that is 38,000 square miles greater than all of the arable land in Italy, Spain, Portugal, France, Germany, Great Britain, and Ireland; 38,000 square miles, I say, greater than all the farm lands in the six states of the Old World I have named.

As to the aggregate amount of these mortgages, I have no sufficient data to predicate an opinion. But I assert, without any fear of successful contradiction, that the interest amounts to more than the profits of the farms, after paying taxes and supporting the families living upon them.

This fearful state of affairs is the result of excessive interest charges, excessive transportation charges, and insufficient volume of money, excessive taxes, and improvident management of our public domain; and this is a true picture, as I verily believe, of the situation in this country. As to the aggregate, I do not undertake to contradict the figures of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE] or to support those of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. But that the situation is appalling and sufficiently serious to challenge the attention of the American Congress there can be no question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish to say just a word. If it is the intention to carry on this line of discussion, it will be better to have the committee rise and the House take a recess. But if gentlemen will stop offering their amendments and allow us to take up the remaining sections, I think we can get through with the bill in fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no desire on my part to retard the progress of the bill or to prevent it being finished to-night. The amendment I propose is in good faith. It is to insert after the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]——

The CHAIRMAN. There are already two amendments pending.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be read for information. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following:
"And the effect thereon of the state of the currency."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, no one can condemn more than I do this system of combines and trusts, nor can any one sympathize more fully than I do with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] with reference to the agricultural distress which is alleged to exist in the United States. It is our duty, to my mind, as enlightened statesmen, or at least legislators, to find out the evil and apply the remedy if it is within the range of law.

Mr. WEAVER. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. I am inclined to think that the state of the currency has more to do than a tariff with this condition of affairs touching agriculture. That with the operation of the natural law of demand and supply has reduced the value of corn, of wheat, and of various products to an alarming extent. We ought, therefore, in the investigation which we want in this connection, to include this inquiry; and if that fact is established, no one would seek more than I would to correct the wrong, whether this condition of things comes from our present tariff laws or whether it comes from the state of the currency.

Mr. WEAVER. I am glad to hear those statements made here.

Mr. RANDALL. And I hope the gentleman from Indiana will accept this amendment, because I think it is pertinent.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If I can do so I will.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to that amendment, because I consider the currency question is an important one, and when it is locked up by taxation it is still more important.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to say one more word in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I think it ought to be inserted in the bill.

I have heard on the floor of the House and in my own State a good deal said about the vast amount of mortgages resting on the farms of the Mississippi Valley and of my own fair State. I have heard it said you could not walk over my State from Minnesota to Missouri, and from the Mississippi to the Missouri River, without everywhere stepping on mortgaged land. I have heard the same remark made in regard to the great States in the Mississippi basin. Allow me to say that that is all the purest rot and demagogy.

When men standing in a high position on the floor of this House make such statements, whether their own assertions or quoted from newspaper articles, they go to the country with the reputation of the men who make those statements.

And when they say that the lands of the State which I represent here in part is assessed at five hundred and odd millions of dollars they make a mistake of $140,000,000. The real estate of my State has never been assessed at a higher amount than $360,000,000; and when they say that the mortgages resting on the State of Iowa amount to $620,000,000 they make a mistake of $550,000,000. [Laughter.] I have a dispatch from the chief magistrate of Iowa in regard to the statements that were made on the floor of this House some days ago in relation to the mortgages resting on the lands of that State, in which dispatch he tells me that those mortgages would not exceed the sum of $70,000,000. And, Mr. Chairman, what is true of the great agricultural State of Iowa, whose people are intelligent enough, in my judgment, to understand just how much they are taxed and how much they are imposed upon according to the theory advocated here the other day, I take to be true of all the other great States of that great Mississippi Valley, for they are one in sentiment and in interest.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What did the gentleman say was the assessed value of the Iowa lands?

Mr. GEAR. Three hundred and sixty million dollars.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And the mortgages are $70,000,000?

Mr. GEAR. Seventy millions. Of course the assessed value is not the real value. The gentleman knows that very well.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GEAR. We will not vote yet. I will tell gentlemen how property is assessed in Iowa. It is assessed at 35 cents on the dollar.

Mr. WEAVER. Do I understand my colleague to say that farm lands in Iowa are assessed at only 35 cents on the dollar?

Mr. GEAR. I say they are so assessed, and I speak from the record.

Mr. WEAVER. That is a mistake. They are assessed at 60 per cent.

Mr. GEAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have occupied a position in Iowa where every acre of the assessment came before me for review and equalization.

Mr. WEAVER. So have I. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. And I know that the assessed value of real estate in Iowa is to-day $8.04 an acre under its equalized value, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] knows well that that is not over 35 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] has expired.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is one aspect of this case that ought to be treated before we dismiss it. I do not believe that these figures, corrected as they have been by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], or even if taken in their full extent, indicate all the terrible disaster which is alleged to have fallen upon the farmers of this country. I admit as freely as any one that if a man owns a farm and if it has been paid for and he is obliged, in order to pay his personal expenses, to mortgage his farm, it is a great misfortune, and if such a state of things had arisen generally in this country, this country would be on the verge of destruction. And if this state of things existed in an old and settled country, all the doleful prognostications which have been made would be well founded. But this is not an old and settled country. It is a country of enterprising people who are not content with simply owning the property which they can buy and pay for, but who go on enlarging their business, the farmers as well as the merchants, by purchasing more than they can pay for and borrowing money of less enterprising people, and all this goes to make our country greater.

Every man before me knows this. Where, then, is the use of blinking it? Where is the use of going on here as if this was not the fact? It is because our people are settling lands largely beyond their immediate means. It is because they are extending their enterprise over the prairies. Suppose you should apply the same line of reasoning to Broadway and Sixth avenue, New York. If you should take the firms extending along those streets and compare their capital with the money which they actually owe, or their stocks on hand with the money they actually owe, you could picture to yourself a whole line of five-story fronts in a condition of the utmost sorrow, distress, and despair; and yet if we did that we should every one of us know that we were fooling ourselves with our own words. We do not have to look very far to see and to know that this country is prosperous and that it is growing more and more prosperous every year.

Mr. SPRINGER. Especially under Democratic rule.

Mr. REED. Under the protective system, if the gentleman wants to know the cause.

Why, sir, in my own State I have had occasion to notice the course of things in the last few years. We do not increase there in population; we have not the large materials of wealth undeveloped which exist in the West, or the great trading facilities of New York and the Central States. But I have seen almost every farmer's buildings growing better year by year. The very cattle are better housed than their owners were fifty years ago. Yet men who reside in agricultural districts come here and for mere political effect undertake to perpetrate what I say is a slander upon their own constituents. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN obtained the floor.

Mr. WEAVER addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN]. The Chair will state that a few moments ago he recognized the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the bigger "gentleman from Maine" got my place; and I am very glad he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment as follows:
"And the Commissioner is required to investigate the Mills tariff bill and report upon the effect it will have upon the labor and industries of the United States and its effect upon foreign industries and the profits of foreign manufacturers and the markets of our farmers."

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine, before he begins his remarks, that there are now two amendments pending; and unless this be accepted as a modification it can not be entertained until one of the pending amendments has been disposed of. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine as entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, when my bigger colleague from the State of Maine robs me of nothing more than five minutes of time I consider that I get out of him as good a bargain as I have ever secured from him in any transactions I have had with him. [Laughter.] I forgive him when his injuries go to no greater extent.

I simply wish to say—and my colleague not only took my place but at the same time "stole my thunder"——

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to put his speech in your mouth.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That can not be done. My friend from Illinois can do great things, but he can never put my colleague into my skin. By way of addition to what has been said, I wish to remark that new communities everywhere are to a certain extent mortgaged to the older communities, because the new community has not had time to accumulate. The young man is mortgaged to the older man. Men go out into the West; they take up farms; they have not perhaps one dollar in the world. They put their farms under mortgage to buy stock, and to get agricultural implements. A gentleman gets up in this House and calls attention to that fact in order to show the great oppression upon the farming interests of the country.

Now, I feel as much concern in the farming interests of the country as any man does. I was once a farmer's boy. I think I understand the hardships of the farmers; and I know something of their independence too. While it is true that the farmers as well as the manufacturers and merchants are embarrassed by mortgages, and always will be so long as the most enterprising citizens of the country, those who do the most business, continue to be borrowers, still there is a progress and improvement with which every man ought to be gratified. When the gentleman's section of the country shall have become old, when the people there shall have had time to accumulate property, then they may become the lenders, as they are to-day the borrowers. If the gentleman could have his way, if he could have free trade, if he could destroy the home market for these farmers, if he could bring them to the condition in which they were thirty years ago, when one of them would bring a dozen eggs to market, sell them for 10 cents and take his pay in store-goods, the result would be that instead of having, as now, persons coming to their doors and buying their products for twice the sum in cash that was then paid in commodities from the store, he would have these farms mortgaged for all that they are worth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEAVER. I wish simply to say a word in reply to my colleague from Iowa, Governor GEAR. I am very familiar with the condition of affairs in my State; and when my colleague asserts, on the authority of the governor of the State, that the mortgages will not amount to more than $70,000,000, although that is a very large sum, it is not, in my judgment, large enough by one-half; $150,000,000, according to my best judgment, will not cover the mortgage indebtedness of Iowa.

With regard to the number of farms mortgaged, I say it would be an accident if a man traveling from the south line of Iowa to the north line, or from east to west, should happen to step upon a farm that was not mortgaged. In my remarks awhile ago I said that 62½ per cent., at least, of all the farms of the whole country are mortgaged. This per cent., I again assert, will hold good throughout the Union. It may be less in some States and more in others. In the State of Missouri it is as large as in Iowa; in the State of Kansas much larger, in my opinion.

And now one word in reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I do not wish to dispute, in a captious spirit, anything which has been said by the gentleman; but if he says that the mortgaged farmers of Iowa are making money and adding to their improvements, or are able to do so, his statement is not correct, as everybody in my State knows. As I have said, 62½ per cent. of the farms in Iowa are under mortgage, and these farmers are not, as a class, able to pay their interest charges and taxes, support their families, and at the same time improve their farms.

Mr. MCKENNA rose.

Mr. WEAVER. California is a world of itself.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is the remedy?

Mr. WEAVER. More money, lower transportation charges, and less taxes. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending, and debate has been exhausted.

Mr. MILLS's amendment was adopted; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. STEELE. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Missouri to run the session beyond 12 o'clock, which would cut off the Committee on the Judiciary?

The House divided on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 62, noes 61.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 22, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JULIET C. PALMER.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I find on looking at the Calendar of Business this morning and also at the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings that the bill (S. 607) for the relief of Juliet C. Palmer, widow and administratrix of James C. Palmer, late Surgeon-General, United States Navy, was objected to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and is, therefore, upon the Calendar of objected cases under Rule IX, losing its place under Rule VIII. As I understand from the Senator from New Hampshire, there was no intention on his part to have it take its place on the Calendar of objected cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be placed on the Calendar as having been passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is what I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

GEORGIA PACIFIC RAILROAD BRIDGES.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably, with certain verbal amendments, the bill (S. 2220) to correct an error in and to further amend "An act to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi," approved March 3, 1887. At the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], whom I do not see in his seat, I ask the Senate to consider the bill now. It simply corrects a mistake in the title of a railroad corporation in a bill providing for the construction of a bridge. It is simply a verbal amendment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 5, after the word "Mississippi," to insert the words "approved March 3, 1887;" so as to read:

That the act entitled "An act to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi," approved March 3, 1887, be, and is hereby, amended by striking from the title and enacting clauses thereof the word "railroad," wherever it occurs in the statement of the name of the corporation therein mentioned, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "railway," so as to make the corporate name of said corporation read: "The Georgia Pacific Railway Company," instead of "The Georgia Pacific Railroad Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "follows," at the end of line 17, to strike out the word "namely," at the beginning of line 18; so as to read:

And by striking out the words "two years from the passage of this act," where they occur in the final clause of section 3 of the act, and inserting the words "four years from March 3, 1887," in lieu thereof, so as to make said final clause read as follows: "And if said bridges shall not be finished within four years from March 3, 1887, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee also report amendments to the preamble, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1 of the third paragraph of the preamble it is proposed to strike out the word "the" where it occurs the second time, and in the second line of the same paragraph to strike out the word "as" and insert "is;" so as to read:

Whereas the said Georgia Pacific Railway Company is the true and only beneficiary of said act, and since the passage thereof has been using all the means in its power to complete its plans for the location and construction of bridges across the rivers named in said act, in accordance with the recommendations and approval of the Secretary of, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

WORK IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report adversely on the Senate resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] March 8, 1888, to print 6,000 copies of the report of the Senate select committee to inquire into the methods of business, etc., in the Executive Departments, and to recommend in lieu thereof the adoption of the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution reported adversely will be indefinitely postponed. The concurrent resolution reported by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Senate select committee appointed under resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into the methods of business, etc., in the Executive Departments, and accompanying documents, 6,000 copies, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. DAWES. It is difficult to follow a conference report made out in the way such reports are and read at the desk; and therefore, if the Senate will indulge me, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senate conferees as to what disposition was made of amendment numbered 55, on the thirty-first page?

Mr. HALE. Amendment numbered 55 reads as follows:

To pay Shirley C. Ward, of Los Angeles, Cal., $2,500 for his services to date as special attorney for the Mission Indians of Southern California, under appointment by the Attorney-General, made at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

The House conferees absolutely refused to agree to that, taking the ground that the appointment of this man was not authorized by statute and not covered by the practice of the Department under the law for employing special attorneys, and the Senate conferees yielded at last. So it goes out of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. An amendment amounting to only $2,500 is perhaps a small thing on which to delay the Senate in the consideration of so important a bill as this; but the circumstances connected with the amendment are such that I feel justified in calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that for the second time the conferees on the part of the House have utterly refused to pay for very valuable services rendered by an attorney appointed by the Attorney-General at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, upon the ground that they are able possibly to get it out from under the statute, which I will read:

SEC. 364. Whenever the head of a Department or bureau gives the Attorney-General due notice that the interests of the United States require the service of counsel upon the examination of witnesses touching any claim, or upon the legal investigation of any claim, pending in such Department or bureau, the Attorney-General shall provide for such service.

Under this section the Secretary of the Interior requested the Attorney-General to employ a lawyer to appear in behalf of certain Indians in California against whom a writ of ejectment had been brought and who were liable to be dispossessed of a reservation which they had occupied for a hundred and fifty years; and they were about to be dispossessed under a claim set up under the United States itself. The Attorney-General appointed this man, and I desire to give the history of the case.

The Mission Indians in California have occupied two or three small reservations there, as I stated, for one hundred and fifty years. They began their occupation under the Catholic priests who occupied that coast under the Spanish Government, and were taken care of there under the religious supervision of the Catholic priests, who established their missions, and they were called Mission Indians. The Mexican Government covered all that coast, just before we acquired it, with Mexican grants, indefinite and large, containing many leagues sometimes, and in many cases without regard to the occupation of the land by the Indians.

When the Mexican Government secularized, as they called it, the property of the priests of the Roman Catholic Church there they took away whatever claim of title the Indians had to this land, and then covered it with these grants. The grants were confirmed by a commission sent out in 1854 by the United States, and the grants occupied by these Mission Indians came into possession of subsequent owners. One of these owners commenced an action of ejectment against the Indians, and the Department several years ago employed a firm of lawyers in Los Angeles to appear for the Indians and to assert their rights on the reservation.

The public sentiment of that locality was so strongly against this proceeding and in behalf of the men who claimed under the grant that these lawyers after awhile thought it for their interest to abandon the case, and the Indians were about to be dispossessed and set afloat. It is well known that the Department of the Interior sent out a commission there to see if an arrangement could not be made, the commission consisting of Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson and a gentleman in California, whose name I used here the other day, but which has passed from my recollection now. They proposed a bill. That bill passed the Senate two years ago, and it passed the Senate within two or three days again; but the suit went on, and last year the attention of the Secretary of the Interior was called to the destitute condition these Indians would be in, houseless and homeless, if these suits prevailed. Men who were kindly disposed to these Indians, in Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, sent at their own expense a special agent to California to investigate the matter. On his return and report to the Secretary of the Interior, with whose sanction he went out, the Secretary of the Interior requested the Attorney-General to employ some new lawyer to take up the suit that had been abandoned, and defend these Indians in the courts of California.

A young lawyer by the name of Shirley C. Ward, the son of the agent whom this Administration had put in charge of these Indians, was willing to undertake it, notwithstanding the strong current of public opinion in that locality against him. He received the appointment from the Attorney-General. He defended these Indians in the court below, and the court below decided against the Indians. He carried the case to the supreme court in California, and about three weeks ago the judgment of the court below was reversed and a decision rendered in favor of the Indians, and the Indians were reinstated upon their reservation. Other suits were commenced against other Indians on other of these small reservations, and are still pending.

This young man has been nearly two years in that work. If anybody knows what it is to have Indians for clients, he will know that they will cheer him with their presence a good deal of the time from the moment of his employ, working in their interest, until he gets through; and this young man was hardly able to do anything else but attend to these suits. He took them up against the current of public opinion in that country, and he obtained a reversal of the judgment in the supreme court of California and reinstated the Indians in a property which becomes theirs, subject to the rights of the United States, to a pretty large amount. He has not had a penny for his services. When he was appointed the Attorney-General appointed him without any stipulation as to his pay, because the Attorney-General was then without funds, and, the suit not being in the name of the United States, he was not certain whether it came within the section which I have read.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], representing the Committee on Indian Affairs, made personal application to the Attorney-General in reference to this matter, and his letter to the Senator from Alabama I desire to have read at the desk. I send it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, February 29, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your note of even date herewith, after having carefully read it and its inclosures, I beg to say that at the request of the Secretary of the Interior Mr. Shirley C. Ward was appointed, January 13, 1886, special attorney for the Mission Indians in Southern California. During the two years which have elapsed since his appointment he has exhibited great fidelity in the discharge of his duties, and a professional ability fully equal to the demands of his office. I am informed that his clients, who are poor and ignorant, take up a great deal of his time during the year outside of his necessary appearances in court in their behalf. In the case of Byrnes vs. Alas et al. I think Mr. Ward rendered very valuable services, and if this Department had been called upon to pay him therefor, a fee of $2,000 or even of $2,500 would not have been considered a large one, according to the usual standard of charges and allowances in such or similar cases.

It is proper to add that Mr. Ward's appointment was without compensation from this Department.

The inclosures accompanying your note are herewith returned as requested.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

HON. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate.

Mr. DAWES. The very elaborate opinion of the supreme court of California was forwarded to the Attorney-General by this attorney, and has met with his approval, and the attorney has received his congratulations for his success. Now it is proposed to accept all this service of two years from this man and give not a penny for it. This is the second time it has been stricken out of an appropriation bill under a conference. I am not criticising the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate, for I know very well from experience that pressure upon them compels them often to choose between what they believe to be right and the necessity of a bill.

I desire to call public attention through the Senate to the idea that the United States can honorably accept this service at the hands of this man and refuse to pay him a penny for it. I venture to say that there is no honorable man in this building, I know there is no such man in the Senate of the United States, who would accept the service of any man, valuable service, performed at his request, and after performance refuse to pay a penny for it. The RECORD comes to us this morning laden with utterances made in another quarter of profuse regard for the laborer. We have only to believe that those professions are sincere, to believe that those who utter them would be only too glad to pay a laborer who had faithfully performed service for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. President, this is the second time, as I have said, that this item has been put into an appropriation bill and rejected upon the ground suggested here. I do not desire to make anything like a threat, much less to serve notice—I am not in the habit of serving notice, as the Senator from Tennessee knows very well—but, with the permission of the Senate, this amendment will go into every proper appropriation bill as long as I have a seat in this Chamber until it shall be decided by an enactment that the laborer is not only worthy of his hire, but that he shall get it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the report be not agreed to so far as regards the item authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Samuel A. Robinson, which is struck out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the rules, a conference report can not be separated. It must be adopted or rejected as a whole.

Mr. CALL. Then I hope the Senate will not agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. CALL. I desire before the vote is put to say a word.

I hope the Senate will not agree to the report of the conference committee. The conferees have agreed to strike out the item authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Samuel A. Robinson out of the appropriation for improving the sanitary condition of the Treasury building $595. The striking out of this item is an outrage. Mr. Robinson is an honest man, a capable man, who has rendered very great service to the Government under a contract made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, approved by him as to the amount, recommended to be paid in a report to Congress of the present Secretary and in the estimates, and a claim in every respect honest and meritorious, and this is the appropriation for his payment.

There is perhaps no man upon whose intelligence and skill the lives and the health of the people of this city, including the women and the children, and of the members of Congress and of their families, are more dependent than upon Mr. Robinson. There is no man upon whose gratuitous and unpaid services the lives and the health of the people of the people of this District and every official of this Government are more dependent than that of Mr. Robinson. He is an officer of the District under a statute which creates an inspector of new buildings—not public buildings, not old buildings, but simply the plumbing and sanitary work in the construction of new buildings, and for that he receives a salary of about one-half or one-third the amount paid for similar services to persons in ordinary business. Because of that fact, because he is employed for that specific class of duty in the District of Columbia, he is refused payment under a contract made by the Secretary of the Treasury under an appropriation by Congress for an entirely different service, and a service which he was perhaps better qualified to render than any other person that could have been selected, because of his eminent skill and knowledge in sanitary matters.

When this matter came to be considered by the Treasury Department under an appropriation of, I think, $50,000 for the replumbing of the Treasury Department, Mr. Manning, as appears in the records of the Treasury, sent for Mr. Robinson. Subsequently Mr. Fairchild employed him, and employed him at a specific amount or rate for this service. His plans were submitted to a board of sanitary engineers, together with those of a large number of others, and they were accepted in preference to all others. He worked laboriously for weeks and months in his own time at night upon this work; and after it was done, after it was accepted, after it had received the approval of the most eminent engineers in this country, his account was approved, and a very moderate amount, not one-half, I am told, what would be charged by other sanitary engineers in private business, was ordered to be paid. The Comptroller decided that it was within the terms of the decision of the Supreme Court which affirmed that the law in relation to the payment of officers in the Government holding two offices did not prohibit payment for services rendered in pursuance of law other and different from the duties of the office held by them, but that he did not consider himself authorized under the appropriation as it stood to pay this amount without some action by Congress. The Secretary then again recommended the payment of this sum of money, and it was put on the bill by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in pursuance of an amendment offered in the Senate. This is the history and this the character of this most honest and meritorious provision of the deficiency bill, which has been stricken out without justice, right, or reason.

Here is this meritorious man, this skillful sanitary engineer, whose eminent skill has been approved, who has rendered gratuitous service to everybody in this District in case of sickness from impure air in their households, the father of a large family, a poor man in actual need of this money, and he is deprived of it without conscience and in positive violation of law. I think this is a case where the committee should stand and where the Senate should stand. I think we have no right to take, without reason and without law, money out of the pockets of poor, honest, and meritorious men who render service to the Government under specific contract made by the Secretary of the Treasury, approved by him, and required to be made by him under the express authority of an act of Congress. Therefore I hope this report will not be agreed to, although the amount is only $595. I hope the Senate will make a stand on the subject, and that somewhere and in some way we will be able, if we are to make raids on the people by depriving honest and meritorious citizens of just and reasonable payment for services honestly performed, to select some class of people who are rich enough to avoid positive need and suffering to be the victims of our unjust denial of their right and our duty.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee of conference a question in reference to the provisions of this bill.

The House bill as it came to the Senate, on page 26, had an appropriation of $10,000—

For pay of special agents and necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes."

The Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Senate struck out that provision. I wish to know whether that provision has been retained or whether it goes out.

Mr. HALE. The House recede from their disagreement to that amendment and the clause goes out.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then it is not a part of the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the reason for that?

Mr. HALE. The Senate conferees did not endeavor to make the House conferees adhere to clauses which the Senate struck out. The Senate conferees represented the action of the Senate in striking out the clause from the bill, and the House conferees agreed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I now ask the Senate to take up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] proposing the reference of the President's annual message.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding was that the Senator should be heard on the conclusion of the morning business. If there be no further morning business, the resolution called for by the Senator from Delaware will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have called up this resolution for the purpose of making some observations upon our revenue laws, prominently brought to the attention of Congress and the country by the President's message.

At no time since the organization of the Government has the revenue required for its support been derived from any one source, but recourse has been had at times to all the forms of taxation which Congress is authorized to employ. From the earliest period of our national history, however, the chief reliance of the Treasury has been upon duties imposed by law upon foreign merchandise imported into the country. This mode of taxation had been tried by England and other countries long before we had an existence as an independent power, and had been found a fruitful source of revenue for the governments that had adopted it. It was no untried experiment, therefore, when Mr. Madison, in the first Congress that met after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, proposed to lay and collect duties on imported merchandise to meet the urgent wants of the Republic, embarrassed by the debts incurred in the war for independence and destitute of the means to meet its obligations and provide for the expenses incident to the organization and maintenance of the Government.

The country was at that time largely dependent upon importations for many things necessary for every class and condition of the people, and moderate import duties were certain to supply a fair share of the revenue required. This mode of taxation had then, as now, another consideration in its favor which was doubtless not overlooked. The people of that day were generally poor, especially in ready money, and the lightest burdens it was known would be regarded as oppressive. Hence it was desirable to conceal from view as far as possible the exactions made upon their limited means for the support of government. Duties paid at the custom-house by the importer and charged as a part of the price paid by the consumer, were less likely to attract attention and lead to complaint than taxes which were more direct and palpable, and in the organization of a revenue system when the people were ill able to bear its burdens it was necessary to give as little cause for dissatisfaction as possible.

The policy adopted at that early day of raising a large part of the revenue from import duties has been accepted as wise and proper by the people of the country for now nearly a century, and has become by general consent the settled policy of the Government in raising its revenues. No considerable portion of the American people are now or ever have been in favor of a resort to other modes of taxation that would dispense with import duties or render reliance upon them as the chief source of revenue unnecessary. No party charged with the administration of government has ever proposed, or in all probability ever will propose, the substitution of other methods of taxation that will dispense with collections at the custom-house or reduce the taxes there collected below at least one-half the amount needed by the Treasury. While there has never been any difference of opinion in regard to the propriety and wisdom of taxing the importation of foreign goods and deriving from that source a large share of the revenues needed by the Government, there have always been, and are to-day, very wide differences of opinion as to the extent to which and the object for which such taxation should be imposed. The Democratic party, as an organization, has maintained in its past history and now holds that the only proper object of taxation in any and every form is to secure the necessary amount of revenue for the support of government; that every man is bound to contribute his just share of that amount in consideration of the protection to his life, liberty, and property, and no more, and to take from him any greater share of his property or any portion of it for any other purpose is unjust and indefensible—none the less so because taken under the authority of law. The Government collected from customs in the last fiscal year over $217,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the collection from the same source during the present fiscal year will reach $228,000,000. There is now in the Treasury a large surplus, which will amount to more than $100,000,000 by the 30th of June unless wasted in unwise appropriations, and no debt or obligation of the Government due or to which it can be applied before 1891 without paying a high premium to the holders of the Government bonds. This condition of affairs demands a revision of our tariff laws and a reduction of the taxes which it imposes. The Democratic party is in favor of such revision and reduction, and will, unless thwarted in its purpose by a combination of a few Democrats, actuated by local interest, with Republican members of Congress, sensibly reduce the duties charged by the present tariff upon many things now heavily taxed.

The Republican party, judged by the utterances of its leaders and its press, will oppose any reduction of taxation that will lessen the profits of the classes protected by the existing tariff. If they can reduce the surplus accumulating in the Treasury by large and unnecessary appropriations or by a remission of taxes which do not interfere with the profits of the manufacturing interests of the country, they will do so; but they will not consent, if they can prevent it, to any modification of the tariff that is opposed by the favored classes that have enjoyed the protection which it has afforded for the last twenty-five years.

I think I state the position of the two great parties of the country correctly when I say the Democratic party is in favor of reforming the tariff in the interest of the people, and the Republicans in favor of maintaining the tariff in the interest of the protected classes. There may be a few Democrats who are protectionists and a few Republicans who favor revenue reform, but these exceptions on the one side or the other can not change the position of the parties with which they claim affiliation. Both of the parties will be judged by the policies at which they aim, and not the views of dissentients within their ranks.

To maintain the existing tariff, which for more than a quarter of a century has oppressed the people of the country, and defeat its repeal or modification, in order that the protected classes, who have grown rich by the exactions it has made upon others for their benefit, is the purpose of Republican leaders in Congress and in the country.

To reduce the taxes of the people, so far as it can be done consistent with the requirement of the Government for revenue, is the avowed purpose and aim of the Democratic party. This is no new position, but is in harmony with the history of the Democratic party on the subject of Federal taxation from the days of Jefferson to the present time.

No sooner had the President's message been sent to Congress, directing attention to the necessity for a reduction of taxation, than the advocates for protection on this floor and the utterances of Republican leaders and the Republican press in the country denounced the President and the Democratic party as advocating free trade. I shall make no apology for saying that such unwarranted assertions are without justification or excuse, but are either hasty and inconsiderate assumptions or willful and deliberate misrepresentations of the President and the Democratic party. Such assertions on the part of unscrupulous partisans, with no characters to lose by a disregard of truth, can neither damage their own reputation nor inflict injury on those they misrepresent. But how Senators and others occupying high positions in the country can so far forget what is due to themselves as to assert that the President or the Democratic party is in favor of free trade is beyond comprehension. Yet, strange as it may seem, such declarations and insinuations have been recklessly made upon this floor, with full knowledge that nothing in the history of the Democratic party, past or present, could justify such an accusation.

Does any sane man believe that the Democratic party, charged with the administration of the Government, would abolish all tariff taxation and deprive itself of the revenue necessary to carry on the Government and meet the demands upon the Treasury? No one believes it, and such railing accusations are inspired by the hope that they may delude some ignorant and unthinking voter in the next Presidential election and help to power the men who make them. The Democratic party is not in favor of free trade, but is earnestly in favor of reducing the tariff so that no greater burden of taxation shall be imposed upon the people than is necessary to furnish sufficient revenue to meet the just demands on the Government.

Is it not time that by a careful revision of the tariff the people of the country should be relieved from a part of the burden of taxation which they have so long borne with a degree of patience which no other people have ever exhibited? For twenty-five years they have been paying into the Treasury in customs duties large amounts of money which they needed for their own comfort and the comfort and convenience of their families. A very large per cent. of those who have paid these taxes could illy spare the contributions they have been forced to make, but submitted to the sacrifice in the belief that the necessities of the country demanded it, and in the hope that the Government, when the necessity had passed, would release them from the oppression which so long had afflicted them and impose no greater taxation than was required by the just demands upon it. The Treasury no longer needs the full amount of taxes collected. A large surplus is annually accumulating in its vaults which can not be used in the payment of the public debt at the par value of the bonds not yet due. Why, then, should not the taxes of the people be reduced? In no other country on earth could the people have borne such a drain upon their resources. Besides the large amounts paid annually for the support of State, county, and municipal governments, aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars, there has been paid into the Federal Treasury from customs alone in the last quarter of a century—that is, since the present protective-tariff system has been in operation—$4,293,857,599.72, and from internal revenue $3,558,011,444.77, besides what has been received from other sources.

I append a statement of receipts from customs and internal revenue in each year from 1863 to 1887, which will also show the receipts from customs for some years prior to 1863:

The taxes paid at the custom-house go into the Treasury, and can therefore be computed; but the taxes imposed by the tariff do not all go into the Treasury. The duties imposed upon imported goods have enabled the domestic manufacturers to demand for their fabrics a much larger price than they otherwise could have obtained, and this additional price paid on domestic goods is as virtually a tax upon consumers as the duties paid on the foreign goods imported into the country. The tax paid on the foreign products at the custom-house goes into the Federal Treasury, and the tax paid on goods produced in this country goes into the pockets of the manufacturers. We imported in the last fiscal year merchandise upon which duties were paid to the value of $450,325,322. On these importations there were duties paid to the Government to the amount of $217,000,000. I do not know the value of the domestic goods consumed in this country in the same year, but it was many times the value of the imported goods upon which duties were collected. I have seen it estimated that domestic goods to the value of $6,000,000,000 are annually consumed by the people of the country. Nor will I assert that the cost to the consumer of all the home products is enhanced by reason of the tariff laws of the country; but I do assert in the most positive and unequivocal terms that the cost to the consumer of a very large proportion of the products of home manufacture is largely increased by reason of the protection afforded by the tariff. I have heard this denied. I have heard it asserted that the consumer of imported goods does not pay the duties imposed by the tariff; that the foreign manufacturer pays the duty imposed by our tariff laws for the privilege of selling his products in this country.

Is it not surprising that intelligent men are so forgetful of what they owe to their own reputation, as well as what they owe to their fellowmen, as recklessly to assert what they can not believe themselves, and what no man, unless he is an idiot or partially insane, can believe? All such assertions, come from what source they may, are calculated, if not intended, to deceive the ignorant and uninformed, and are the more reprehensible because designed to impose upon the credulity of those whose confidence they may enjoy. The men who make such assertions know that the American importer pays for the goods he buys in the foreign market the price which the foreign manufacturer of such goods receives from his customers at home. They know, too, that the importer, in addition to the prime cost of the goods in the foreign market, pays the charges of shipment and transportation, and when they arrive at New York or any other port to which they are consigned he is compelled to pay the duties to which they are liable before he can have them taken to his store. The men who make such reckless assertions and declare that the consumers of imported goods do not pay the duty imposed by the tariff, know full well that the importer adds to the cost of the goods in the foreign market the freight and other charges of transportation, as well as the duty paid at the custom-house, and adjusts his profits upon the whole cost of the goods delivered in his store. But I will not reply further to such statements; their absurdity is their own best answer.

I have already said that the duty imposed by our tariff laws upon articles imported into this country enables the manufacturers of similar articles here to demand a higher price for their fabrics than they otherwise could do. No one, I suppose, will dispute this proposition who intends to deal honestly with himself or others. Why should our manufacturers desire a high rate of duty, or any duty at all, upon imported goods if they are not thereby enabled to sell their own fabrics at higher prices? What protection do our tariff laws afford if they do not enable the producer of domestic goods to demand higher prices than he otherwise could obtain? If tariff laws do not secure this result, they afford no protection to manufacturers unless they impose duties so high that they prevent importations.

It would be impossible to state definitely the aggregate increase of profits which our present tariff secures to American manufacturers over and above the profits which their business would afford if there were no duties on foreign goods, or if the tariff was reduced to a revenue standard. It is certain, however, that the present tariff has increased their profits hundreds of millions of dollars more than they would have been under a tariff for revenue alone, and that the people of the United States have paid in the increased prices of domestic goods a much larger amount annually to manufacturers than they have paid into the Treasury in duties upon imported goods. Two hundred and seventeen millions of dollars was paid in duties to the Government in the last fiscal year. This amount was paid upon $450,325,322 worth of goods imported, upon which duties were collected, and we consumed in this country not less than ten times that amount of domestic goods. I venture nothing, therefore, in expressing the opinion that the people of the country have paid annually since 1862 to the manufacturing industries in the increased prices which the tariff has enabled them to demand a much larger amount than they have paid into the Federal Treasury in duties on imported goods consumed. I have already stated that there have been paid into the Treasury in the last twenty-five years duties to the amount of over $4,000,000,000, and I have no doubt twice that sum within the same time has been paid in enhanced prices to the manufacturers of the country.

Had the average rate of duties been only such as was required to meet the wants of the Treasury for the ordinary expenses of the Government, including interest on the public debt, the amount paid into the Treasury and the tribute paid to the manufacturing interest would have been much less annually, and a saving effected to consumers in the time the present tariff has been in operation of not much less than $6,000,000,000. Under a revenue tariff manufacturers would have enjoyed ample protection, more than would have compensated them for any difference in the cost of labor here and in European countries, and the people have been relieved from the payment of that large amount. Under the present tariff there has been paid into the Treasury in duties on importations and to the manufacturing industries in enhanced prices which the tariff has enabled them to exact for their products, a much larger sum of money annually than has been realized from all the agricultural products of every kind, including cotton, tobacco, and cereals, as well as other things exported from the country in the same time. The value of agricultural products exported during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was $523,073,798, and I have no hesitation in expressing it as my opinion that it is a much less amount than was paid into the Federal Treasury in customs duties and to the manufacturers in the increased prices of their products under the protection secured to them by the tariff laws of the country in the same time.

For twenty-five years this constant drain upon the resources of the people has been going on under a protective tariff, and has been borne with a degree of patience as remarkable as it has been oppressive. The consequence has been that the protected classes and the section of the country where they operate most largely have increased in wealth far in excess of all other classes of persons and all other portions of the country. The New England States, with fewer natural advantages than almost any other section of the country, with a less fertile soil, incapable of producing sufficient food for the inhabitants, have grown rich, partly upon the tribute which the tariff laws of the country have enabled their industries to exact, and partly, perhaps, from other financial legislation of Congress which has inured to the benefit of their people.

I have in my hand a statement in a leading Western paper, the truth of which I have no reason to doubt, that the people of nine States of this Union, engaged largely in manufacturing industries, own one-half of the entire wealth of the country as a result of the policy which has obtained in this country for the last quarter of a century—a policy which they have had a large share in fastening upon the country for their own benefit.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

HOW TO GROW RICH.

It is very important to remember that the nine industrial or manufacturing States of the Union are the capitalist and creditor States also. They all loan money to the other States, and all the other States borrow from them. There is not a single one of the twenty-nine agricultural States that is not to a greater or less extent under mortgage to the money-lending creditor States. These mortgages on farms and railroads represent an enormous aggregate. In Kansas it is estimated that one-half the entire wealth of the State is mortgaged to the industrial States; and even the older Western States, Ohio, Illinois, Minnesota, Michigan, and Indiana, are mortgaged to the extent of 20 to 33 per cent. of their farms and nearly all their railroads. It is stated that the insurance companies of Hartford, Conn., hold $70,000,000 in Western farm mortgages; that the loan companies of Boston hold 81,000 mortgages, representing $76,000,000, and in the little State of New Hampshire Western farm mortgages to the amount of $35,000,000 are held. If the whole debt claim of the industrial States on the farms and railroads of the agricultural States could be ascertained, it would probably be not less than $3,000,000,000, bearing an annual interest of $180,000,000.

The industrial States have not only shaped the revenue policy of the Government for the benefit of their manufacturing interests, but they have been equally successful in shaping the financial policy of the Government, also, for the special benefit of their monetary interests. There was not a financial measure taken by the Government from 1862 to 1885, with a single notable exception, that was not dictated or suggested by them—and it may well be inferred that they made no small amount of money by it.

Take the 5-20 bonds, $1,600,000,000 in amount, issued during and just after the war. They bore 6 per cent. and were payable, not in gold and silver coin, but in "lawful money"—and lawful money at that time meant greenbacks. But the money power of the capital States secured the passage of an act in 1869 converting this greenback debt into a gold debt. As the bonds had cost only 70 cents in gold, the profit on the conversion was a clear $480,000,000.

Their next profitable achievement was the resumption of specie payment in 1879. Of course specie payment had to be resumed, but this does not impair the value of its tremendous effect in favor of the creditor States at the expense of the debtor States, whereby $3,000,000,000 indebtedness was increased at least one-third, or $1,000,000,000.

The whole management of the national debt has been in the interest of the creditor States, and, although the effects have been so gradual as to be almost imperceptible, they have still been of a very substantial character. In the last twenty-five years the holders of the Government bonds, living chiefly in the creditor States, have been paid in interest alone $2,325,000,000, a sum greater than the entire bonded national debt at its maximum.

We have stated that there was a single case in which the capital States failed to have their way in the monetary policy of the Government. It was in the passage of the silver-coinage bill. They opposed it with all their power, because they sought to have all debts estimated in gold alone, whereby 10 to 15 per cent. would have been added to them, and in the arrogance of their opposition one prominent paper at least in New York went so far as to threaten a withdrawal of the moneyed States from the Union.

It is no wonder the industrial States have grown enormously rich under the Federal policy of the last twenty-six years. They have shaped that policy in its two most practical features, revenue and finance, and shaped it with such effect as to make themselves owners of one full half the entire wealth of the country, and to force the agricultural States to pay them $180,000,000 a year in interest alone.

This is the result in no small degree of the advantages which they have enjoyed under a tariff levied and maintained not so much to secure revenue for the Government as to increase their profits and hold the people of the country tributary to them. Is it not strange that Senators representing the great agricultural interest of the West should be willing to see a revenue system maintained as the policy of this country which taxes their constituents far in excess of the requirements of the Federal Treasury in order that the manufacturing States may grow richer and richer, while the rest of the country is becoming their debtors and in a certain sense their slaves? The tariff is more onerous upon the farmers and planters of the country than any other class of the American people. It taxes them on almost everything they buy and excludes their products, to a certain extent, from the markets of other countries. Let us see. The farmer is taxed upon his clothing and on many articles of his food; he is taxed upon the furniture in his house and every implement of husbandry used in the cultivation of his crops, his plows and harrows, his wagons and carts, his drills and reapers, every hoe, spade, shovel, fork, and rake—in short, everything necessary to the prosecution of his business is directly or indirectly taxed under the operation of the tariff laws of the country. The tariff not only increases the cost of all he has to buy, but by limiting the foreign demand for our cereals and breadstuffs prevents their exportation abroad and leaves a surplus on hand to depress the markets for his products at home.

If we had no tariff, or a lower or revenue tariff, so that foreign products could come into this country without being too heavily taxed under our revenue laws, our commerce with foreign countries would be greatly increased and our surplus wheat and corn go abroad and be exchanged for such things as we need from them. The restrictive policy of this country is depriving the farming community of its right to the markets of the world and denying it the just reward of its labor.

I repeat there is no portion of the American people so seriously affected by the operation of our protective tariff as the farmers of the country, and am glad to know that the depressed condition of their business for the last few years has given them to understand more clearly than ever before the true reason for the low prices of their grain and other products, and hope the time is not far distant when those who represent them in this Chamber and the other House of Congress will be less indifferent to their interests than they have been in the past.

Not only does the present protective tariff bear heavily upon the agricultural interests of the country, but the interest of every other class of our citizens is disregarded in the interests of the protected classes. Men and women engaged in almost every calling and pursuit bear a portion of the burden imposed and maintained for the benefit of the manufacturers. When I speak of manufacturers I mean the large establishments, the owners and operators of mills and factories employing large amounts of capital and doing an immense amount of business, and laying up fortunes from the advantages secured to them from the tariff. I do not mean the small local establishments scattered through the country, more properly mechanical than manufacturing, doing a small local business and deriving comparatively little profit from their occupation. These small establishments, necessary to every community, are not manufacturing establishments in the accepted sense of that term, and are injured rather than benefited by the tariff. I repeat it is not only the persons engaged in agricultural pursuits—a very large portion of the people of the country—who are oppressed by the present tariff, but those engaged in the other varied avocations of life are likewise, though not perhaps to the same extent, compelled to pay tribute to the protected classes as well as taxes to the Government.

There is not a man or woman in the land, including the operatives or employés engaged in manufacturing, that does not contribute more or less of the fruits of their labor to increase the profits of the protected classes. In every town and hamlet in the country there are many men and women who are unable to indulge in the luxuries of life, and some of whom can scarcely procure by their labor sufficient food and clothing for themselves and families, who are paying, under the exactions of the tariff laws, duties to the Government and tribute to the manufacturers fully as much in proportion to their means as their more wealthy neighbors. Now, is it not right that these people and all others should be relieved from all taxation not absolutely required to defray the legitimate expenses of the Government and be left in the enjoyment of the means at their command without being required to assist in increasing the fortunes of the capitalists who invest their thousands in the large factories and mills and reap the profits which the protective tariff enables them to divide?

Why is it, then, that the Republican leaders on this floor and throughout the country oppose a modification of the tariff? Do they not know that they are assisting to oppress unnecessarily one portion of the people in order to benefit another class? Do they not know that they are maintaining a system of taxation which is especially oppressive upon the great agricultural interest, not only by the high taxes which it imposes, but by the limitation it places upon the markets where agricultural products can be sold?

The products of other countries are so heavily taxed by our tariff laws that their markets are virtually closed to our agricultural products because no profitable trade can be maintained with them. If we could barter or trade with the South American republics without having to pay heavy duties upon what we obtained in exchange from them, new markets would be opened for our surplus flour and grain and their price be enhanced at home as well as abroad.

The accumulation of a large surplus in the Treasury is a fact that can neither be denied nor ignored, and the other side of this Chamber have not failed to understand that it was a standing protest against the high tariff which they desire to maintain. They regard it as a menace to the protective policy which they defend, and know full well unless that surplus can be reduced and kept down that a public demand will compel the reduction of the high rate of duty which takes unnecessarily more than $100,000,000 from the pockets of the people annually and locks it up in the vaults of the Treasury.

Fertile in expedients, the Republican leaders of the Senate have not been slow to devise ways and means to avert the danger threatening their protective policy. Their first move has been to spend the money, whether wisely or unwisely makes but little difference. Hence it was that a bill was introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to pay back to the States the sum of fifteen millions of dollars collected as direct tax twenty-two years ago. No State and the people of no State had asked the money to be refunded. It was a voluntary act on the part of Congress, prompted by a desire to reduce the surplus in the Treasury, and remove as far as possible the danger which threatened the protective tariff by an overflowing Treasury.

Then came the Blair bill, proposing an appropriation of $79,000,000 to the support of common schools in the States, a part of which was to be paid out of the present surplus in the Treasury, and the residue to be paid out of any surplus that might hereafter annually be on hand. Some Senators honestly in favor of revenue reform did not see or were unable to shun the net that was spread to entrap them, and assisted to pass through this body both these measures, neither of which becoming a law would be of any practical value; certainly not of sufficient value to justify the retention of the present tariff taxation, which both measures were calculated, if not designed, to aid.

The pension bill which has passed this body was doubtless also supported by some in the belief that it would reduce the surplus and lessen the necessity for revenue reform. It may have been this object that suggested the various amendments proposed to the bill as reported by the committee, which if they had been adopted by the Senate would have depleted the Treasury of its surplus and prevented further accumulations for years to come. The rivalry exhibited in professions of zeal for the interest of the soldiers and the Grand Army of the Republic during the discussion upon the bill would have been as amusing as the performances in a first-class circus but for the total indifference which was revealed for the interests of the people who pay the taxes into the Treasury.

So anxious were some of the performers in the comedy to surpass all competitors in professions of admiration of the soldiers of the late war (I will not say for their votes) that they were not only indifferent to the amount of taxation that would be necessary to pay pensions, but attributed to hostility to the soldiers any hesitation on the part of others to acquiesce in their views that tax-payers have no rights worthy of consideration in the American Senate. Mr. President, no man who is not willfully blind can fail to have seen that more anxiety was felt to make political capital for themselves and their party by some of the superserviceable friends of the bill than was felt to promote the interests of those who would be benefited by its passage; and unless I overestimate the intelligence and honesty of many who were in the war they will discount, very largely, the professions of zeal in their behalf, from a conviction that they were inspired by political rather than patriotic motives.

I have already said that the Republican leaders in this Chamber and throughout the country regard the large excess of revenues annually collected as a menace to the protective tariff which they have fastened on the country, and are ready to waste such excess in unwise appropriations of the public money in order to continue the exactions it makes in the interests of the protected classes already grown rich from the benefits it secures them. If they can not get rid of the surplus by unwise and unnecessary extravagance in appropriations, they will do so if they can by a repeal of all internal-revenue taxation or such changes therein as will prevent a reduction in tariff duties. The money derived from internal-revenue taxation is chiefly from the tax imposed on tobacco, beer, and whisky, amounting in the aggregate in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, to $118,823,391.22. If this source of revenue could be abolished there would be but little surplus hereafter in the Treasury, and less necessity for tariff revision. High duties could be maintained upon clothing and other necessaries of life and the protected classes left in the enjoyment of the privilege of increasing their wealth at the expense of the rest of the people of the country. I do not say that all Republicans are in favor of the absolute repeal of all internal-revenue taxation, but it is the demand very generally of the protectionists, whose interests the Republican party and leaders have taken in charge, and many of the leaders of that party are at present ready and willing to obey their behests and comply with their demands.

Who would be benefited by the repeal of the tax on tobacco, beer, or whisky? There are more than one-half of the people of the country who do not use in any form either tobacco, beer, or whisky, and the repeal of the tax on them would not benefit the non-consumers in the least. Nor would the repeal of the tax on either article benefit the consumer of either to any large extent. Perhaps the manufacturers of certain chemicals and drugs might be able to procure a supply of such alcoholic liquors as are used in their business at cheaper rates, but the consumers of their drugs would pay fully as much as they do now and would not be benefited by the repeal of the tax. So with tobacco in its various forms; the manufacturers of tobacco and cigars would buy a supply of raw tobacco and pay no tax upon it, but their customers who use tobacco either for chewing or smoking would pay not one cent less than they pay now. Can you buy tobacco in any form cheaper to-day than you had to pay when the tax was 32 cents per pound? You can not buy in this city, and I doubt whether you can buy in any city in the United States at the present time, a bar of tobacco or a box of cigars for a farthing less than you could buy the same quality of goods fifteen years ago, yet the tax has been reduced from 32 to 8 cents a pound. The consumer, as every man in the country knows, has derived no benefit from any reduction of the tax on tobacco, and will, in my opinion, derive no benefit from the repeal of the tobacco tax if the tax should be taken off.

Nor do I believe that the producer would be benefited by its repeal. There is only a certain quantity of tobacco required to meet the demand, and when the crop of tobacco is in excess of that demand the price will be low, tax or no tax. It is the demand and supply, and not the tax, that determine the price which the planter receives for his crop. I have seen it stated that the growers of tobacco in Kentucky, and perhaps some other States, realizing this fact, occasionally limit the acreage planted, in order to sustain remunerating prices for their products. The manufacturers of tobacco and cigars would doubtless be benefited by the repeal of the tobacco tax, as they have been by the reduction heretofore made in the tax, but neither the producers nor consumers of tobacco in any form would be profited. I admit that if it could be shown that the tax upon tobacco affected the price to the grower to any considerable extent it would be unwise to retain it, but until that can be shown there is no necessity for its repeal. Experience has shown that the reduction of the tax on tobacco from 32 cents to the present tax of 8 cents has benefited no one but the large manufacturers of tobacco in the form in which it is used. The growers obtain no more for their products, the price depending largely upon the quantity and quality of their crops, which must be sold soon after being prepared for market because of liability to injury.

Nor, Mr. President, would the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes cheapen the price of either tobacco, whisky, or beer to the consumers of those articles. They would pay no less for what they consume of either than they now pay. But suppose it would; suppose the men who indulge in the use of tobacco, beer, or whisky could procure them at a reduced cost, would it be wise to repeal the tax upon them in order that consumers might save a trifle in the purchases they make? The use of whisky, beer, or tobacco is purely voluntary, and may be abandoned without injury to the health or happiness of any one. The indulgence in the use of either is a habit, not a necessity, and is often injurious rather than beneficial, and without seeking to limit the indulgence in either, these articles may and ought, as mere luxuries, very properly be taxed in order to lighten the impositions on such things as are essential and necessary.

The repeal of internal-revenue taxation would necessitate high duties on many of the necessaries of life, and is advocated by some persons for the purpose of preventing a reduction of taxes on articles of food and clothing and other things which people in every condition of life, the poor as well as the rich, the laboring man and his family as well as those in better circumstances, are compelled to have. How can any Senator justify and defend a revenue policy which will continue high taxation on such things as people must have in order that whisky, beer, and tobacco may escape taxation and bear no part of the burdens necessary for the support of the Government? For one, sir, I am opposed to any such policy, and am in favor of retaining the taxes on whisky, beer, and tobacco, in order to release from taxation, as far as possible, everything essential to the comfort and happiness of all classes of the people.

The system employed for the assessment and collection of internal revenue is justly objectionable and ought to be changed, and the odious features of the system and the petty annoyances to which it gives rise ought to be remedied. I would vote most cheerfully for any measure that would obviate the objectionable methods employed either in assessments or collections, and remove, as far as possible, the inquisitorial features of the system; and I hope that the Finance Committee will give consideration to this matter at the present session. If I believed that the growers of tobacco would be benefited by the total repeal of the tobacco tax I would not oppose such repeal. Believing, however, that no benefit would accrue to the producers I am in favor of retaining the tax, in order that a reduction may be made in the taxes imposed upon the necessaries of life.

Those who favor a repeal of the internal-revenue taxes base their opposition to such taxation on the ground that it was a war measure justified by the exigencies then existing, but unnecessary now; that the war having ended more than twenty years ago this system of taxation which they term a war measure ought to be abandoned. It is true, Mr. President, that prior to the war we had no internal-revenue taxation, nor was there any necessity for such taxation. The whole amount of revenue required by the Government prior to the war did not exceed some sixty millions of dollars—less than one-fourth now required—and therefore there was not the necessity for a resort to any other mode of taxation than the imposition of duties upon imported goods. The right to impose such taxes always existed in the Government, but its exercise was not demanded by the conditions existing prior to the war. The war, it is true, ended more than twenty years ago, but the burdens of the war yet remain. The public debt created by the war is yet unpaid and will in all probability remain unpaid for a long time to come. The pension-list, resulting from the war, is larger than ever before, and, as we know in this Senate, is rapidly increasing both in the number of beneficiaries and the amounts paid them. Let me ask, are the internal-revenue taxes any more war taxes than the large increase of tariff taxation which was imposed to meet the expenses of the war and is still maintained under your tariff laws?

The exigencies of the war taxed the energies of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and his associates in the other House in 1861 and 1862 to ascertain and include on the tax-list everything that would yield a dollar of revenue and to increase the duty to the utmost extent it would bear without becoming prohibitory, and this increase in the number of articles taxed and the rate of duties to be paid was urged as a necessity created by the war. The duties then levied remain with slight modification, although the war ended more than twenty-two years ago. Why is not tariff taxation, at least the increase in tariff taxation, as much war taxation as that imposed by the internal-revenue system? And why are protectionists seeking to repeal the internal-revenue system on the plea that it is a war measure, while opposing the slightest modification of the tariff which they know now yields four times the amount collected under any tariff that existed before the war?

For one, Mr. President, I prefer to see the reduction of taxation demanded by the surplus in the Treasury made upon such things as will give the greatest relief to the people, and especially to those least able to bear the burdens of government.

There is nothing, in my opinion, from which the revenues of the Government can be derived, in part at least, more properly than from taxes on tobacco, beer, and whisky, and nothing that can be taxed with so little injury to the people of the country. Change the methods of assessing and collecting the internal revenue and do away with the harsh features of the system and you will have removed most of the objections now made to this mode of taxation and relieve the people from annoyances too often aggravated by the insolence of unworthy officials.

Mr. President, I shall now notice briefly some of the reasons assigned by protectionists for opposing a revision of the tariff and a reduction of the duties it imposes. These reasons are stereotyped, and have been employed by the advocates of protection from the beginning of tariff legislation in this country, and will be urged by that class of men while self-interest influences human action whenever any attempt is made to reduce taxation and lessen the burdens of the people.

It is said that our industrial establishments can not compete with manufacturers abroad. This was the plea for high tariff nearly a hundred years ago, when tariff legislation was commenced in this country. The plea at that time was doubtless a good one. We had at that time but few industries of the kind—but little capital invested therein—with no skilled labor employed in manufacturing and but little experience in the business. Because of this condition competition with the older and better-regulated establishments of Europe was hopeless, and Congress in the early legislation to secure revenue by import duties wisely sought to adjust them in a manner that would aid our then infant industries in their struggle for existence so far as it could do so consistently with the necessity for revenue. That necessity, however, was the acknowledged limit of the taxing power, and no one thought of imposing higher taxation on importations than was necessary to raise the revenue required by the Government. Within that limit discriminations might properly be made in adjusting the details of a tariff so as to aid incidentally the few manufacturing industries then existing. That policy of incidental protection in the adjustment of duties was continued in the early legislation on the subject, and very properly continued when necessary, because the average rate of duties then imposed was low and insufficient to aid some of the industries in the competitive struggle in which they were engaged.

But how very different are our manufacturers situated to-day. There is no lack of skilled labor, and in machinery we excel all other countries. There is no lack of capital or want of experience, as formerly, in the business, and without protection other than that afforded by a revenue tariff most of our manufacturing industries could compete at home and abroad with similar industries in any part of the world. Some of the newer industries, in which labor is the principal item of cost and in which machinery can not be used to any considerable extent, may be an exception, and no one would hesitate to grant them necessary aid in the adjustment of the details of a tariff limited to the demands of the Treasury for revenue.

Such a tariff would require an average rate of duty of not less than 25 or 30 per cent., which would more than pay the difference between the cost of labor here and in England or any other country in Europe and leave a fair margin of profits on the capital invested without lessening the wages paid to operatives.

Again, the advocates of a high tariff insist that it is necessary to insure proper wages to labor. They have become ashamed to ask longer for protection to infant industries. The most of our manufacturing establishments have grown to maturity, and are no longer infants needing the paternal care of the Government on their own account; but the plea of protection is interposed in the name of the labor employed. This is a specious plea, and if honestly made would command respect; but everybody knows it is not honest. It is an attempt to continue unnecessary taxation under false pretenses, in order that the manufacturers may make larger profits, not that the laborers in the mills and factories may obtain higher wages. The manufacturers and all other employers obtain their labor at the lowest possible price, and this will continue to be the case whether the tariff is high or low. Has labor shared in the profits of the manufacturers, enormously increased under the present tariff? No, sir. Employés have often been compelled to submit to a reduction of their wages, and sometimes compelled to strike in order to maintain prices that would enable them to support their families. Labor is not too well paid in any avocation in life, and no better paid in mills and factories than in many other pursuits, and I should be glad to see the day when it could command constant employment and a just return for its value to employers; but high tariff will never secure this result. Its proper remuneration depends upon conditions wholly independent of tariff laws. Such laws may, however, and do affect the cost of living to the laboring man as well as everybody else, and the higher the duty which they impose on the necessaries of life, for which his wages have to be expended, the more seriously do they embarrass him. He can buy more for his wages when duties are low than when they are high.

If you desire to improve the condition of the laboring men of the country, whether engaged in mills and factories or on the farm or in other pursuits, make the tariff as low on the things he is compelled to buy—his food, his clothing, etc.—as the condition of the Treasury will allow, but do not deceive him by the pretense that his earnings will be increased or his condition improved by maintaining a tariff which adds to the cost of everything he has to buy.

If high tariffs increase the wages of working people, how is it that in Germany and other European countries having such tariffs wages are lower than in England, which is practically a free-trade country? Can our Republican friends, upon their theory of high tariffs and high wages, solve that problem? Tariff laws, whether they impose high or low duties, do not affect wages, but they do increase or diminish the cost of living, and for that reason every workingman in the country is interested in having the tariff as low as possible.

I will read on this point an article taken from a leading newspaper:

[From the Albany Argus.]

THE TARIFF AND WAGES.

If war taxes on articles of necessity make high wages, how does it happen that the lowest wages are paid in those occupations where there is the most "protection" falsely so called? Men who work in the coal and iron mines of Pennsylvania get only 90 cents a day, and in some instances as low as 60 cents, while day laborers in the streets of any city are paid at the rate of a dollar a day or more.

If a high tariff makes high wages how does it happen that in Germany, which is a high-tariff country, mechanics earn on an average less than $4 a week, while in free-trade England the same men for a smaller number of hours are paid $7 a week?

The high tariff has nothing to do with wages. English workmen are paid higher wages than German workmen because they do more work in many branches of industry. American workingmen are paid higher wages than English workingmen because they are more skillful and do more work. The official statistics of the three governments prove this. Here is one fact in evidence. On the average each operative engaged in woolen manufacturing in this country makes up into finished product 1,640 pounds of raw material. In England the operative on the average makes up only 1,275 pounds. The American operative in fewer hours of labor does one-fourth more work than does the English operative and earns easily one-fourth more pay. Does he get any more? Take spinners, for instance: In England their pay per week averaged about $7.70. If the American spinner turned out one-quarter more work what should he have been paid? Clearly about $9.60. What did his pay average? Less than $9.10. Take weavers, for instance: In 1880 in England their pay averaged about $6. If the American operative turned out one-quarter more goods he ought to have been paid, even on the English free-trade basis, $7.50. His pay in Massachusetts, as a matter of fact, ranged on the average from $6.95 to $7.45.

Although Germany is a high-tariff country and England is free-trade, why do German operatives get less pay than English operatives? Because they turn out less work. While the average American operative in a woolen mill makes up into goods annually about 1,640 pounds of wool, and the English operative makes up 1,275, the German operative makes up only 975 pounds. He does not do as much and as efficient work; he earns less money and he gets lower wages.

The same is true of other lines of production. Where an operative in an American cotton manufacturing establishment makes into goods 100 pounds of cotton, the English operative makes up only 67 pounds, and the German operative 28 pounds.

Laboring men are not to be deceived in the matter of wages. They know that no law of Congress or of the State can increase their pay. The better artisans they are and the better machinery and tools they have to work with, the more money they earn, and the less amount of work a man does or the more poorly he does it and the more inferior his tools and machinery the less he earns.

While laws of Congress can not increase or decrease wages, workingmen know that Congress, by putting taxes on every article of necessity they use, can make it more expensive for them to live. That is what the present tariff does. It does even worse. The poorer a man is, and the more modest his wants, the higher he is taxed. Silk stockings, for instance, are taxed 50 per cent. of their value, while common woolen socks are taxed 73 per cent. Raw silk is admitted free, and raw wool is taxed 40½ per cent.; India shawls are taxed 40½ per cent. and common woolen shawls 86 per cent. Diamonds are taxed 10 per cent., ottar of roses and orange flower scent and olives and spices come in free, while woolen jackets are taxed 40 per cent., salt 12 cents a hundredweight, and so on through the long list.

The interest professed for the workingmen by the protectionists is confined to those who are employed in the manufacturing industries. Less than three millions of our people, including men, women, and children, are thus employed, out of a population of more than sixty millions. It is not claimed that high rates of duties on importations increase the wages of any other class of working people. Why is it that the solicitude of our Republican friends who profess such interest in the employés of the mills and factories is thus restricted? Are there no other wage-earners but such as work in the manufacturing establishments? Why is it that their love for the sons of toil does not extend to those who labor in the field, in the mines, in the shops and stores, on highways and streets in your towns and cities as well as for those engaged in manufacturing establishments? The reason is obvious, they want to secure the support of the manufacturers of the country by increasing their profits under the pretense of benefiting their employés. Many of the operatives in the manufacturing establishments are intelligent men and will appreciate at its true value the motive which prompts such devotion to their interest.

They fully understand that high duties increase the profits of their employers, but add not a farthing to their wages. But now, Mr. President, in all honesty and fairness, if the maintenance of the present high tariff, which is enriching the protected industrial classes at the expense of all others, did secure better wages to the persons in their employment, which I most unhesitatingly deny, would it be right and just to continue for their benefit a rate of taxation that takes from the laboring men and women in all other pursuits part of their earnings by increasing the cost of their living? There are not three millions of persons engaged in manufacturing industries, while there are more than fifteen million engaged in other avocations. Nearly eight millions of people are employed in agricultural pursuits alone who are as poorly paid for their labor as any class of the American people. Is it right, is it just that the sixty millions of our population not engaged in manufacturing industries should be taxed beyond the requirement of the Government in order that the three millions of persons in mills and factories shall be paid high wages for their work, if a high tariff could have that result? Is it just to the seven million six hundred and seventy thousand four hundred and ninety-three farmers and men toiling in the field to maintain a high tariff and collect from them money not needed by the Treasury and compel them to pay higher prices for their clothing, their hats, their shoes, all in fact which they buy, their implements of husbandry as well as on every article of furniture in their homes, simply that one-third of their number employed in a different occupation may obtain higher wages.

No portion of the American people work harder or are poorer paid than the farming community. Fully one-half of the persons engaged in agricultural pursuits are working for wages or are tenant farmers, owning no homes of their own, but cultivating lands which they rent from others. Their property consists chiefly in the furniture in their houses, and in the live-stock and utensils necessary in the cultivation of the land. Necessity compels, on their part, incessant toil and industry, as well as the strictest economy, in order to quit expenses and maintain their families. As a general rule they have to deny themselves and their wives and children of most of the luxuries of life in order to pay their necessary bills and keep out of debt. No better citizens live in America to-day than the men who cultivate the soil as owners or tenant farmers. None are more honest and upright in their dealings with their fellow-men, or contribute more by precept and example to the good order and well being of society. Why should they be compelled to pay more for all they have to buy in order that manufacturers may realize larger profits from their business or their employés receive higher wages for their labor?

Why should mechanics and working men and women in all the avocations of life be compelled to pay a portion of their small earnings, not needed by the Government, in order that others in better condition than themselves may be benefited?

Is not the present tariff taking from the people in taxes more than $100,000,000 annually which the Government does not need, and if this exaction is longer continued to promote private interest will it be improper to call it robbery under the form of law? Another argument advanced in support of the present tariff is based upon the large increase in the business and wealth of the country since it has been in operation. It is said the country has been prosperous under the present tariff; therefore it should not be disturbed. This argument is intended to convey the impression that the prosperity of the country has resulted from our tariff laws, and is virtually a declaration that taxing the people and taking from them a part of their earnings has increased their wealth and improved their condition. If the argument had assumed another form I might accept it as true. If it should be asserted that taxing the great body of the people for the benefit of a particular class had increased the wealth of those for whose benefit the tax was imposed, I should not dispute it; but I do deny that the material wealth and prosperity of the country have resulted from the taxes paid into the Treasury or the tribute paid under the tariff to the manufacturers.

The country has prospered under the tariff, but not from it; and it would have prospered under a revenue tariff or under free trade, but not necessarily as a result of either, but from other causes wholly independent of tariffs and despite the burdens which they impose. Why should not this country be the most prosperous on earth? Where do the sources of wealth and prosperity so richly abound as here? With an extent of territory stretching from ocean to ocean and from the great inland seas on the north to the gulf on the south, with every variety of climate, soil, and production, capable of furnishing everything necessary for the sustenance of man, with rivers of oil and untold mineral deposits beneath our feet—the richest mines of the precious metals in the world—and a rapidly-increasing population of enterprising, industrious, and energetic men, why should this country not be the most prosperous and richest in the world? Our prosperity as a people is independent of the tariff, and despite the drain it has made upon their resources for the benefit of the industrial and protected classes. The country was prosperous under the tariff of 1846, strictly a revenue tariff, and the people were contented and happy. The present tariff may have increased the wealth of certain individuals and particular classes of persons, but it has been at the expense of the great body of the people, who have been deprived of their substance beyond the requirements of the Treasury in order to foster industries and increase the profits of their owners. So far as these exactions have been in excess of the amount of revenue needed by the Government they have been unjust and extortionate, and their abatement is demanded alike by public policy and common honesty.

It has been said in support of the present tariff system that high duties lead to competition in the various industries and to a reduction of prices in the articles produced, so that purchasers and consumers of domestic goods obtain them at lower rates than they could do if the duties upon foreign goods were less. That competition in some of the industrial establishments may have been stimulated by the great profits made under the tariff is not denied, nor is it disputed that prices of some articles of domestic production have declined; but this has not resulted from tariff duties imposed upon foreign importations or from the competition in business which they may have produced. There has been no greater decline in prices of manufactured goods in this country than in England, where there is no protective tariff. Certainly it will not be said that our tariff laws have affected the prices of goods manufactured abroad, and yet prices have declined in Europe fully as much as in the United States. The decline in prices everywhere has resulted from the same causes; improved machinery used in manufacturing, greater skill and better methods in business, and many other improvements in the general management and details which experience and ingenuity have suggested have resulted in a reduction in the cost of production and in prices not only here but everywhere else.

The claim that lower prices have been secured by tariff taxation is fallacious and deceptive, and is advanced to justify a system of taxation at variance with sound policy and indefensible upon any principle of honesty or justice.

Mr. President, in advocating revenue reform I have no desire and am sure the Democratic party has no purpose or intention to do anything that can justly be regarded inimical or unfriendly to the industrial interests of the country. On the contrary, I desire to see them, one and all, shielded and protected against hostile legislation and unwise interference with any right which they can justly claim. But I am unwilling to see the people of this country, of all classes and conditions in life, oppressed by unnecessary taxation to foster private interests and enrich particular classes of men. I am especially unwilling to see the man and woman who toil for a bare subsistence and whose lives are spent in a struggle with necessity unduly deprived of a portion of their earnings, however trivial, to add to the profits or increase the wealth of others who know nothing of their deprivations, their misfortunes and wants. The legislation of Congress, especially such as has related to revenue and monetary affairs, has, for a quarter of a century, tended—whether so designed or not—to advance the interest of persons of affluence and wealth, while it has too often borne heavily on the indigent and those of limited means. The consequence is seen in class distinction based upon property and wealth, which is becoming as marked in this country as in the older portions of the world. Large and increasing fortunes, drawn from the labor and earnings of the multitude, are multiplying in single hands and bodies corporate, investing them with undue influence and power in all the affairs and relations both of public and private life. The tariff laws upon our statute-book, in the exactions they have made upon the resources of the many for the benefit of the few, have had their full share in producing this result, and common justice and the best interests of the country alike demand a revision of these provisions and a limitation of the taxes they impose to the revenue required by the Government.

CONSIDERATION OF THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order of business is the consideration of bills on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask permission at this time to offer a resolution. If there be a single objection to it, of course it will go over until to-morrow. I should prefer, however, that it be considered to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, and XXXVIII as provide for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty, when the same shall be reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. From whom does the objection come? I beg pardon; I could not hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri objects. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1835) for the relief of officers of the Army who have served continuously in one grade for twenty-one years, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted a report embodying certain amendments to the joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889, heretofore reported; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1081) for the erection of a public building at Helena, Ark., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 2485) for the relief of John S. Braxton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MONUMENT TO WASHINGTON'S MOTHER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the Calendar will be resumed, beginning where the Senate left off yesterday.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1211) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Va.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the bill been reached on the Calendar?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; it is Order of Business 433.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill will be taken up for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. We must comply with the general understanding. We shall reach that bill to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Virginia.

LAND-PATENT FEES.

Mr. PLUMB. Yesterday the Senate passed the bill (S. 1681) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, regulating fees for exemplification of land patents, and for other purposes. It is in precisely the language of a bill from the other House which is on the Senate Calendar. As it would be useless for the Senate to pass the Senate bill, I move that the vote by which it was passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1071) for the relief of A. B. Norton; and Joint resolution (S. R. 60) directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid regions of the United States, and to report to Congress.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT GRADES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 1248) to effect a rearrangement of the grades of office of the Subsistence Department of the Army was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the Subsistence Department of the Army shall consist of one Commissary-General of Subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of brigadier-general; three assistant commissaries-general of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel; six assistant commissaries-general of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonel; eight commissaries of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of major; and eight commissaries of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captain of cavalry. The vacancies thus created shall be filled by the promotion by seniority of the officers now in the Subsistence Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. EVARTS. I call attention to the bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, and making other provisions in connection therewith. I was absent from the Senate a few moments before its adjournment yesterday, although I was in the building, and the order under which the Senate is proceeding brought the Senate to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill has been reported to the Senate. It has gone through the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EVARTS. The bill has proceeded, I understand, so far as to be amended in the Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate. That is its present position.

The bill is a very important one, and as introduced by myself contained a certain arrangement of a board for the conduct and supervision of the matter. The committee amended that administration according to the amendments, but the Chamber of Commerce and the maritime boards in New York City are of the impression that this modification will impair very much the utility and practical service of the bill. I therefore do not desire that the bill should, as amended, now be passed, but as it will be quite in my power in the Senate to move to non-concur in the amendments, I desire that the bill may occupy its present position until I am able to call it up again.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the present parliamentary status of the bill. I think it would be important for him, for the purpose that he desires, to move to reconsider the action of the Senate. The bill was, in his absence, reported to the Senate, and on motion all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. EVARTS. That I did not know.

Mr. MANDERSON. So I think he had better make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in, and leave it in that position.

Mr. EVARTS. I was not properly advised as to the position of the bill.

I move, then, that the concurrence of the Senate in the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate for consideration. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time, but he understands that the question is on concurring in the amendments agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANDERSON. No; I understand that the motion the Senator from New York desires to make is that the vote by which the Senate concurred in the amendments be reconsidered, so that the bill shall be left in that position.

Mr. EVARTS. That is all I desire.

Mr. DOLPH. What the Senator from New York desires is that the bill may be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar in its present status, so that when he desires to call it up the Senate may act upon his motion to reconsider the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the Senator from New York in that way.

Mr. EVARTS. I want to have the vote reconsidered now, so that when we take up the bill in the Senate the question will be upon concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to reconsider the votes of the Senate by which the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. I now ask that the bill, which I desire to see passed as soon as may be in its proper form, may occupy its present position on the Calendar until I am able to call it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over and retain its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

FREEDOM OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstructions of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was passed over without prejudice, and it will be considered if there be no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 10, after the word "river," to strike out "or other" and insert "or navigable;" in line 11, after the words "United States," to strike out "for the improvement of which Congress has already made, or may hereafter make, appropriations" and insert "which shall impede or obstruct navigation;" in line 17, after the words "situation on," to strike out "shore" and insert "the bank of any navigable waters;" in line 18, after the word "into," to strike out "any" and insert "such;" and in line 20, after the word "otherwise," to insert "whereby navigation shall be impeded or obstructed;" so as to read:

That it shall not be lawful to cast, throw, empty, or unlade, or cause, suffer, or procure to be cast, thrown, emptied, or unladen, either from or out of any ship, vessel, lighter, barge, boat, or other craft, or from the shore, pier, wharf, or mills of any kind whatever, any ballast, stone, slate, gravel, earth, rubbish, wreck, filth, slabs, edgings, sawdust or other mill-waste of any kind, into any port, road, roadstead, harbor, haven, navigable river, or navigable waters of the United States, which shall impede or obstruct navigation, or to deposit, or place, or cause, suffer, or procure to be deposited or placed, any ballast, stone, slate, gravel, earth, rubbish, wreck, filth, slabs, edgings, sawdust, or other mill-waste in any place or situation on the bank of any navigable waters where the same shall be liable to be washed into such navigable waters, either by ordinary or high tides, or by storms or floods, or otherwise, whereby navigation shall be impeded or obstructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the proviso at the end of section 1 the following words:

Or to prevent the depositing of any substance above mentioned under a permit from the Secretary of War, which he is hereby authorized to grant, in any place designated by him where navigation will not be obstructed thereby.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to the casting out, unlading, or throwing out of any ship or vessel, lighter, barge, boat, or other craft any stones, rocks, bricks, lime, or other materials used, or to be used, in or toward the building, repairing, or keeping in repair any quay, pier, wharf, weir, bridge, building, or other work lawfully erected or to be erected on the banks or sides of any port, harbor, haven, channel, or navigable river, or to the casting out, unlading, or depositing of any material excavated for the improvement of navigable waters, into such places and in such manner as may be deemed by the United States officer supervising said improvement most judicious and practicable and for the best interests of such improvement, or to prevent the depositing of any substance above mentioned under a permit from the Secretary of War, which he is hereby authorized to grant, in any place designated by him where navigation will not be obstructed thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the words "permission of the," to strike out "proper local authorities" and insert "Secretary of War;" and in line 12, before the word "waters," to strike out "other" and insert "navigable;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful to build any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, dam, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or other structure outside established harbor lines without the permission of the Secretary of War in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or other waters of the United States, or in such manner as shall obstruct or impair navigation, commerce, or anchorage of said waters; and it shall not be lawful hereafter to commence the construction of any bridge, bridge-draw, bridge piers and abutments, causeway, or other works over or in any port, road, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or navigable waters of the United States, under any act of the legislative assembly of any State, until the location and plan of such bridge have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, or to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of the channel of said navigable waters of the United States, unless approved and authorized by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 5, after the word "jetty" to insert the words "dike, levee;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to take possession of or make use for any exclusive purpose, build upon, alter, deface, injure, obstruct, or in any other manner impair the usefulness of any sea-wall, bulkhead, jetty, dike, levee, wharf, pier, or other work built by the United States for the preservation and improvement of any of its navigable waters, or boundary marks, tide-gauges, surveying stations, buoys, or other established marks, nor remove for ballast or other purposes any stone or other material composing such works.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 8, after the words "penalties to be," to strike out:

Recoverable by and in the name of the United States of America, with costs, in any circuit or district court of the United States, at the suit of any district attorney of the United States, or at the suit of any person, by information to any district attorney in any district where or near to where the offense shall have been committed or the offender shall be.

And to insert:

Recovered by action in the name of the United States in any district court within whose jurisdiction such offense shall be committed, said action to be instituted by the district attorney for such district at the instance of any person complaining.

So as to make the section read:

That every person, persons, or corporation offending against the provisions of this act shall, for each and every such offense, forfeit and pay a penalty of $250, besides such other sum as may be found in any action for the recovery of the penalty or penalties incurred under this act to be the expense of making good the damage incurred or of removing to a proper place the things deposited in violation of this act, such penalties to be recovered by action in the name of the United States in any district court within whose jurisdiction such offense shall be committed, said action to be instituted by the district attorney for such district at the instance of any person complaining.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 5, after "United States," to strike out "collector" and insert "collectors;" and in line 7, after "United States," to strike out "nearest to the place where" and insert "for the district in which;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of officers and agents having the supervision, on the part of the United States, of the works in progress for the preservation and improvement of said navigable waters, and, in their absence, of the United States collectors of customs and other revenue officers to enforce the provisions of this law by giving information to the district attorney of the United States for the district in which any violation of any provision of this act shall have been committed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the last section:

Nothing in this act shall prevent the reasonable use of the tributaries of any navigable waters of the United States for purposes of agriculture, mining, manufacturing, or domestic purposes, or any other industrial pursuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. GORMAN. That amendment simply destroys the bill so far as it relates to any navigable river where there is mining, particularly hydraulic mining. The Senator from Nevada, of course, is better acquainted with that industry than I am, but one of the main objects of the bill is to prevent persons engaged in hydraulic mining from forcing into navigable streams the immense deposits thereby occasioned.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I will suggest that this does not confer any authority. It is merely a prohibition against a construction of the bill so as to extend to the tributaries of navigable rivers, not to navigable rivers. The committee cut it down by confining the effect of the bill to navigable streams. I do not believe the effect of the amendment is such as the Senator from Maryland supposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEN ISLAND SOUND BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1433) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire that that bill go over without losing its place.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Cumberland River between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, Tenn., or the south fork of said river between Burnside and Tateville, Ky., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 5, line 20, before the word "years," to strike out "three years" and insert "one year;" so as to read:

And if said bridge is not commenced within one year, etc.

Mr. BATE. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think two years ought to be allowed. I move to amend the amendment in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves to amend the amendment by striking out "one year" and inserting "two years." The question is on that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 5, line 21, before the word "years," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And completed within three years from the passage of this act.

Mr. BATE. I move there to amend the amendment by inserting "four years" as the limit in place of three years, as proposed by the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 6, line 4, after the word "whenever," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

SEC. 6. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia as amended.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to call the attention of the Senator reporting this bill to section 4. That section provides—

That no person shall sell, to the prejudice of the purchaser, any article of food or drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser.

It seems to me that that section would be rendered more perfect by striking out the words "to the prejudice of the purchaser;" for it appears to me if they remain in the section it will involve a question that it will be almost impossible to determine in any case that may arise under the section. I therefore suggest that those words be stricken out.

Mr. FAULKNER. I see the point the Senator makes, and I make no objection to his amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Now, I would suggest at the end of line 3 that the word "such" be stricken out and the word "any" inserted; so as to read:

And quality of the article demanded by any purchaser.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FAULKNER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated food or drugs in the District of Columbia."

That there shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the active-list of the officers of the Navy, a chief of the Hydrographic Office with the relative rank of captain, and an assistant with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander, to be entitled, respectively, the hydrographer and the assistant hydrographer. The salary of the hydrographer shall be $4,500 per annum, and the salary of the assistant hydrographer shall be $3,000 per annum. Whenever the President, in order to promote the efficiency of the hydrographic service, shall nominate and appoint an officer of the Navy in the place of either the hydrographer or assistant hydrographer, the officer superseded shall be placed on the retired-list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSION ON LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The bill (S. 372) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment, in section 2, line 1, after the word "commissioners," to insert the word "not;" and after the word "shall," at the end of the same line, to strike out "not;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said commissioners, not all of whom shall be advocates of prohibitory legislation or of total abstinence in relation to alcoholic liquors, shall receive compensation not exceeding $10 per day and necessary expenses; that the necessary expenses incidental to said investigation, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and for this purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated; and the said commission is authorized to employ a stenographer and a clerk if they shall be found necessary. It shall be the duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation and the expenses attending the same to the President, to be transmitted by him to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO SCHOOL OF MINES.

The bill (S. 1102) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 1, line 9, after the words "per annum," to insert "nor shall it exceed the amount expended by the State of Colorado for said school of mines;" so as to make the section read:

That the State of Colorado shall annually receive 25 per cent. of all moneys paid to the United States for mineral lands within the State of Colorado for the maintenance of the school of mines established at Golden, in the county of Jefferson, in said State: Provided, That said sum so to be paid shall not exceed the sum of $12,000 per annum, nor shall it exceed the amount expended by the State of Colorado for said school of mines.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the committee that reported this bill to move to strike out, in line 3 of section 1, the word "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

That the State of Colorado shall annually receive 50 per cent. of all moneys paid to the United States for mineral lands within the State of Colorado for the maintenance of the school of mines established at Golden, in the county of Jefferson, in said State.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether there is any necessity existing in the State of Colorado for the General Government to appropriate money for the establishment of a school of mines or a school for any other purpose?

Mr. TELLER. The United States has made donations of lands for agricultural purposes. It was not thought desirable to ask a donation of land, but a portion of the proceeds of mineral lands sold in the State for the only school of mines on this continent where a thoroughly practical education can be obtained in mining. Under the bill as amended 50 per cent. of the moneys received from mineral lands in the State by the United States is devoted to this purpose, and the total amount can not exceed $12,000, provided always that the State shall appropriate the same amount. The State has already expended over $250,000 besides donations received from individuals for the school of mines.

Mr. MCPHERSON. How much will this amount to?

Mr. TELLER. Not to exceed $12,000 a year out of the proceeds of the mineral lands sold within the State.

Mr. MCPHERSON. How long is this supposed to continue? Is it a perpetual fund?

Mr. TELLER. A perpetual fund while the sale of mineral land continues.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is, then, the same as taking money out of the Treasury of the United States. This is an appropriation of $12,000 a year to continue indefinitely for the establishment of a school of mines.

Mr. TELLER. It continues while the sale of mineral lands continues.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether that State has received an appropriation of public lands as the other States did for agricultural colleges under the grant of 1862 and its amendments?

Mr. TELLER. The State of Colorado received what one Congressional district is entitled to, and only that. The State contains a large area in square miles, but owing to the fact that we had but one member of Congress, we only got as much as one Congressional district. In other words, the State of New Jersey got eight or nine times as much agricultural-college land as we did.

It did not seem to me, and did not seem to our committee, as Colorado is maintaining a practical school of mines, that the sum of $12,000 a year, to be paid out of the sale of mineral lands within our own borders, was a large amount to devote to this purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I did not put the question from any purpose of hostility to the Senator's bill.

Mr. TELLER. No, I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. But, on the contrary, with the purpose of seeing whether the Senator's bill should not be made more ample in its provisions than he has himself designed. It would seem to me that the proper thing to do would be to enlarge this grant to a sum that would be equivalent to what would be a fair grant under the agricultural-college act and to give the State of Colorado some power of control over it.

If you make a special grant for a particular school you establish a precedent under which other States may come in for other schools. Lands, as I understand, are already granted to certain States for agricultural colleges with provision that the State may apply the grant to the benefit of technical or practical schools as well as to agricultural schools. In Massachusetts we give one-half to the School of Agriculture and the other half to the Technological School at Boston, where persons are educated for engineers. The State Legislature has always had a discretion in the selection of the institution to which to devote the grant. If we pick out this special institution and do not put it within the agricultural-college grant, but make this a special grant from the Treasury, I doubt whether it will be a safe precedent. It strikes me that it will be better to provide that this grant shall be made to such an institution as the State of Colorado may select, and that the amount granted shall be taken from the agricultural-college grant.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is a departure from the rule to be debating this bill, and I therefore object to its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I hope it will retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. It can come up to-morrow.

ALIEN OWNERSHIP OF MINERAL LANDS.

The bill (S. 1176) to authorize the sale to aliens of certain mineral lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think that we can consider this bill under the eighth rule. It is probable that there will be discussion on some of the amendments which are now pending to that bill. I think it will be hardly proper to take it up at this time.

Mr. STEWART. I hope it will not be thrown over. I trust the Senator will let the bill be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from West Virginia to object to the consideration of the bill under Rule VIII. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

REWARD TO ESQUIMAUX.

The bill (H. R. 1528) to reward the Esquimaux natives of the Asiatic coast of the Arctic Ocean for acts of humanity to shipwrecked seamen was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

CONFERENCE WITH SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, after the words "South America," to insert "Hayti, San Domingo;" and in line 8, after the word "States," to strike out "at such time as he may deem proper," and insert "in or near the month of April;" so as to read:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested and authorized to invite the several governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, in or near the month of April, in the year 1889, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all and secure more extensive markets for the products of each of said countries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "countries," in line 18, to strike out the following words:

The President of the United States shall appoint six commissioners, who shall attend said conference on behalf of the United States, and shall report the proceedings thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress; and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the reasonable expenses of the conference, to be approved by the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. 2. That in forwarding the invitations to the said governments the President of the United States shall set forth that the conference is called to consider—

First. Measures that shall tend to preserve the peace and promote the prosperity of the several American states.

Second. Measures toward the formation of an American customs union, under which the trade of the American nations with each other shall, so far as is possible and profitable, be promoted.

Third. The establishment of regular and frequent communication between the ports of the several American states and the ports of each other.

Fourth. The establishment of a uniform system of customs regulations in each of the independent American states to govern the mode of importation and exportation of merchandise and port dues and charges, a uniform method of determining the classification and valuation of such merchandise in the ports of each country, and a uniform system of invoices, and the subject of the sanitation of ships and quarantine.

Fifth. The adoption of a uniform system of weights and measures, and laws to protect the patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks of citizens of either country in the other, and for the extradition of criminals.

Sixth. The adoption of a common silver coin, to be issued by each government in such an amount, proportionate to the population of each, as may be determined upon, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American states.

Seventh. An agreement upon and recommendation for adoption to their respective governments of a definite plan of arbitration of all questions, disputes, and differences that may now or hereafter exist between them, to the end that all difficulties and disputes between such nations may be peaceably settled and wars prevented.

Eighth. And to consider such other subjects relating to the welfare of the several states represented as may be presented by any of said states.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be disbursed under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, for expenses incidental to the conference.

SEC. 4. That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, ten delegates to said conference, who shall serve without compensation other than their actual necessary expenses, of whom at least two shall be learned in international law, two in finance, and six who are engaged in agriculture, manufacture, transportation, and the exportation or importation of merchandise, and the several other states participating in said conference shall be represented by as many delegates as each may elect: Provided, however, That in the disposition of questions to come before said conference no state shall be entitled to more than one vote.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of State shall appoint such clerks as shall be necessary, at a compensation to be determined by him, and provide for the daily publication of the proceedings of the conference by the Public Printer, in both the English and Spanish languages; and upon the conclusion of said conference shall transmit a full report of the same to the Congress of the United States, together with a statement of the disbursements of the appropriation herein provided for.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the reading of the seventh proposition, in section 2.

The Secretary read as follows:

Seventh. An agreement upon and recommendation for adoption to their respective governments of a definite plan of arbitration of all questions, disputes, and differences that may now or hereafter exist between them, to the end that all difficulties and disputes between such nations may be peaceably settled and wars prevented.

Mr. REAGAN. I refer to the subdivision which relates to silver, and I ask that it be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sixth. The adoption of a common silver coin, to be issued by each government in such an amount, proportionate to the population of each, as may be determined upon, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American states.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have that provision about silver coin reread.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The subdivision will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sixth. The adoption of a common silver coin, to be issued by each government in such an amount, proportionate to the population of each, as may be determined upon, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American states.

Mr. STEWART. I certainly object to that. I do not think if we are going to use gold and silver there should be a limitation of the quantity of money. There is no use to have a convention to say how much shall be used. If you are going to have an arbitrary limitation, why use gold and silver at all? I object to the bill.

Mr. FRYE. This has nothing to do with gold. It is an undertaking to establish a silver coin which shall be current and legal tender as between the United States and these Central and South American states.

Mr. STEWART. And it is proposed to determine the amount, as if nature had not determined the amount. If you are going to use it, why have a limitation upon the amount? I certainly am opposed to such a provision.

Mr. FRYE. The clause can be amended easily to meet the objection which the Senator from Nevada raises. If the Senator thinks there is any danger in that respect there will be no trouble in amending the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I think it is eminently wise to make a provision that there should be a common coin between the United States and the countries named; but I agree with the Senator from Nevada that we ought not to assume that we wish to place a limitation upon that coin. I think the real interests of this country and of those countries require the coinage of silver upon the same basis as gold, and that we ought, for ourselves, to make a free and unlimited coinage of silver just as we do of gold, and not discriminate against it further. I like that part of the bill which provides for a common coinage, because that would facilitate commercial transactions, but I do not like that part of it which looks to a limitation on the amount of the silver coinage.

Mr. FRYE. Then let the Senator propose an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill go over and retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. Its consideration is really concluded now.

Mr. COCKRELL. If this discussion continues, I shall object to its consideration, and it will certainly go over then.

Mr. FRYE. This is the only point raised.

Mr. STEWART. This is a very delicate subject, and I should like to look at it. Let the bill lie over.

Mr. FRYE. I notice that the silver men elsewhere insisted upon having this provision in.

Mr. STEWART. Perhaps they did not know what they were doing.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that we pass to the consideration of the next bill, and by the time that is disposed of the Senator from Texas will have prepared his amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Very well; this may be passed over temporarily.

Mr. REAGAN. I am content with it if you just strike out that part which proposes to let the proposed conference fix and limit the adoption of a common silver coin. After the word "coin," in line 24, I propose to strike out down to the word "each," in line 26; so as to read:

The adoption of such common silver coin as may be determined upon, the same to be a legal tender in all commercial transactions between citizens of all of the American states.

That would leave out the words:

To be issued by each government in such an amount, proportionate to the population of each, as may be determined upon.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been reported to the Senate, the Senator from Texas proposes to amend it. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In clause 6, after the word "coin," it is proposed to strike out the words:

To be issued by each government in such an amount, proportionate to the population of each, as may be determined upon.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bill lie over. I shall have to object to its present consideration, which I regret to do.

Mr. FRYE. I have not made any objection to its lying over.

Mr. STEWART. Just let it lie over until the next case is disposed of, and then it can be called up, so that we may look at it in the mean time.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be temporarily and informally passed over, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the next case on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: The Senators have agreed upon an amendment to the sixth subdivision, section 2, of the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations to House bill 1473, and I ask it to be taken up.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment we have agreed upon is to strike out all after the word "government" in the twenty-fifth line down to the word "upon" in the twenty-sixth line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read at the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, after the word "government," it is proposed to strike out the words:

In such an amount, proportionate to the population of each, as may be determined upon.

So as to read:

Sixth. The adoption of a common silver coin, to be issued by each government, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American states.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a single question. As I look upon the object he has in view, it is to establish a system of coinage that shall be universal throughout the United States and the South American states. Why does he confine it to a silver coin? If he wants a universal system of coinage and a coin that shall be recognized all over the South American states as well as the United States of America, why does he not simply provide for coinage, without confining it to silver coin or any other particular coin? Certainly if there is any reason why the silver coin should be uniform, there is equal reason why the gold coin should be uniform.

Mr. REAGAN. I was simply proposing to amend the bill as reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to remind the Senator from Texas that he has spoken once upon this bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg leave to remind the Senate and the Chair that debate is out of order under this rule, if I understand the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was endeavoring to enforce the rule.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have no desire to interrupt the passage of the bill or throw any obstacle in its way, but it does seem to me that the amendment of the Senator from Texas does not go far enough.

Mr. VOORHEES. I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not object. The bill is nearly concluded, and it is an exceedingly important one.

Mr. VOORHEES. I know it is, and I do not want to object to it; but I insist upon the rule, and that is, that there shall not be debate. I have sat here watching for bills all the afternoon.

Mr. FRYE. The rule permits five minutes' debate.

Mr. VOORHEES. My objection is not aimed at the bill, but it is aimed at debate.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to the bill——

Mr. CALL. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator from Florida any objection to its holding its place on the Calendar?

Mr. CALL. None whatever. I only object to the proposed limitation upon coinage.

Mr. FRYE. There is not any limitation on coinage now. The Senate has taken the limitation out.

Mr. CALL. I understood that the Senate had inserted such a limitation.

Mr. FRYE. It has simply taken the limitation out. Does the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. FRYE. The objection is withdrawn.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil."

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

OATHS TO MERCHANDISE ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 622) to amend section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to allow oaths to be administered by notaries public, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "public," to insert the words "designated by the collector, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe;" so as to make the bill read:

That section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended so that the said section shall read as follows:

"SEC. 2805. All oaths to be taken upon making of any of the reports or entries or respecting any of the acts mentioned in this chapter, whether by a master of any vessel, or the owner or consignee of any merchandise, his factor or agent, or by any other person, shall be administered by the collector or officer to or with whom the report or entry is made, or by any notary public designated by the collector, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and shall be reduced to writing and subscribed by the person taking and by the person administering the oath; and if said oath be administered by a notary public, he shall also affix his official seal thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] who reported the bill why notaries public can not administer the oaths now?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The section of the Revised Statutes which this bill is designed to amend confines the power of the administration of oaths in cases coming within its provisions to the collector or officer to whom the report or entry is made. As a matter of convenience in the transaction of customs business, it was thought proper to extend the power to administer oaths in certain cases to notaries public. The Secretary of the Treasury was communicated with in order to get his views of the proposed change in the law. He replied by suggesting the amendment which the committee report, and the bill therefore, with the amendment, is in accord with the views of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. COLEMAN.

The bill (S. 1007) granting a pension to John S. Coleman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John S. Coleman, late an employé in the Quartermaster-General's Office, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD FITZGERALD.

The bill (S. 316) for the relief of Edward Fitzgerald was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Quartermaster-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to examine the claim of the Right Rev. Edward Fitzgerald, Bishop of Little Rock, trustee of the Catholic Church in Arkansas, for timber and fuel belonging to said church alleged to have been taken by the United States or the armies thereof at or near Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, during the war of the rebellion; and he may consider the evidence heretofore taken on said claim, so far as applicable, before the Commissioners of Claims and such other legal evidence as may be adduced before him in behalf of said trustee or in behalf of the United States, and shall report the facts to Congress, to be considered with other claims reported by the Quartermaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. PAYSON, and Mr. MCKENNA managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

A bill (H. R. 5617) to provide for the leasing of premises for the Washington city post-office; and

A bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HARRIS. When does the consent rule under which the Senate is now acting expire?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the conclusion of the legislative day to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I have understood, though I only knew that the rule extended to this evening; but I am tempted, though it is a little premature, to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate now that we continue this consent rule until the Calendar has been once called through.

Mr. PLATT. I can not consent to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut objects. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

GEORGE F. ROBERTS AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 2001) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers and others, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the following-named persons, or their legal representatives, respectively, such amounts as shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner or Internal Revenue to have been paid by them or by the firms they respectively represent, as tax on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from warehouse: to George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, $10,790.32; to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., $19,662.19; to Henry W. Smith, surviving partner of T. & J. W. Gaff & Co., $14,062.50; these payments being a refund of taxes exacted and paid on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from the bonded warehouse between July 1 and December 31, 1864, which spirits, it is alleged, had been manufactured and bonded prior to July 20, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHIA W. WRIGHT.

The bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When this bill was formerly under consideration the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] offered an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sophia W. Wright, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw that amendment. This is a very worthy case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not withdraw the amendment. Let a vote be taken upon it. I think $12 is the right amount.

Mr. SAWYER. Very well; I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 13, noes 26.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

The bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Briggs, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to amend the bill by adding the words:

In lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mrs. Briggs is a soldier's widow. She went into the Army with her husband and served as a volunteer nurse through the war without pay. She is drawing a soldier's pension, but we felt that now since she has lost her husband she ought to have $25 a month as a nurse.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO SCHOOL OF MINES.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to return to Order of Business 309, being the bill (S. 1102) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] objected to the bill, but he will withdraw his objection. The bill has been read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. There is no further objection, I understand, to the bill, and it can be put upon its passage.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not object to the bill. I have no objection to the bill itself. I only objected to debate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN MITCHELL.

The bill (S. 11) for the relief of Warren Mitchell was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. There is a minority report in that case, which I suppose stands as an objection. I spoke to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] this morning about it. I ask that the bill retain its place on the Calendar, and we shall endeavor to call it up at an early day upon an arrangement with the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. That course is entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

SAMUEL A. B. WOODFORD.

The bill (S. 525) for the relief of Samuel A. B. Woodford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 7, to strike out the words "Surgeon-General of the Army" and insert "Secretary of War;" and in line 9, after the word "whisky," to strike out the words "and whether or not said Woodford, during the late civil war, was loyal to the United States;" so as to make the bill read:

That the claim of Samuel A. B. Woodford, of Clark County, Kentucky, for the value of 75 barrels of whisky, taken from him by order of General Samuel D. Sturgis, in April, 1863, be referred to the Secretary of War, to find and determine whether or not the United States received the benefit of said whisky, and if he shall find that said whisky was taken for the benefit of the United States (and that said claimant was loyal to the United States during the late civil war), to determine and award to the claimant the value of the whisky so taken; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the sum so awarded, if any, to said Woodford. And that a sufficient sum be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment thereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Weaver, and they are to take precedence in their grade and corps according to their proficiency as shown by their order of merit at the date of graduation; and the commissions of the class of 1882 are to be dated from July 1, 1884, and their names placed on the Navy Register immediately after the name of Charles E. Rommell, and they are to take precedence in their grade and corps according to their proficiency as shown by their order of merit at the date of graduation.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported an amendment, to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That any of such cadet engineers who failed to pass the physical examination at the Naval Academy made at the time of their graduation shall be subjected to further examinations before receiving their appointments as above authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 5, in section 1. After the word "and" I move to insert:

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

So as to read:

Mr. BECK. Any time in the next ten minutes will do.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to Senate bill 35, relating to the promotion of certain assistant surgeons of the Army, retaining its place on the Calendar?

Mr. REAGAN. No, I have no objection to the bill retaining its place on the Calendar. I want an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. STEWART. Let it keep its place on the Calendar, liable to be called up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

POSTAGE ON SEEDS, CUTTINGS, ETC.

I am instructed by that committee to report without amendment the bill (S. 2405) for the reduction of postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, scions, etc., and I ask unanimous consent, after the bill is read, to have it considered at this time. It is very short.

The report was received, and by unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that hereafter the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, and scions shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for each 4 ounces or fraction thereof, subject in all other respects to the existing law.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill just read is an exact copy of a bill passed by the Senate yesterday. If it be in order, I ask that the House bill be considered by unanimous consent. It is an exact copy of the bill passed by the Senate yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move that the bill be recalled from the House of Representatives.

Mr. GEORGE. I make that motion.

Mr. HOAR. Can it be necessary to do that? Can not some member of the House state that the bill has passed here and move to lay it on the table there?

Mr. GEORGE. I thought it would be better to make a disposition of it.

The SPEAKER. This communication will be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CORRECTION.

Mr. COWLES. I rise to a privileged question. Mr. Speaker, in the RECORD, on page 1480, in a question which I put to the gentleman from

Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who then occupied the floor, I am made to say:

I wish the gentleman would tell us how we can have an iron rule upon this subject.

What I did say was, "I wish the gentleman would tell us how we can have a yea-and-nay vote upon this subject."

Again, in a subsequent part of the question, I am made to say:

I am in favor of his amendment, but I do not see how we can have such a rule.

What I did say was, "I am in favor of his amendment, but what I wish is to have a yea-and-nay vote upon the subject in the House."

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the special order.

The SPEAKER. This day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, has been set apart, by order of the House, for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF GEORGIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Hancock, Warren, Glascock, McDuffie, Columbia, Richmond, Burke, Jefferson, Johnson, and Washington, now embraced in the limits of the southern Federal judicial district of the State of Georgia, be, and they are hereby, transferred from the said southern district to the northern district as now constituted by law.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of holding the terms of court at proper localities, the northern judicial district as constituted by this act shall be divided into two, known respectively as the western division and eastern division of said district. The counties of Morgan, Greene, Hancock, Warren, Glascock, McDuffie, Columbia, Richmond, Lincoln, Wilkes, Taliaferro, Oglethorpe, Burke, Jefferson, Johnson, and Washington shall constitute the eastern division of said district, and all the other counties in said northern district as now constituted shall form the western division of said district.

SEC. 3. That there shall be held at the city of Augusta, in the eastern division of said northern district, two terms of the district and circuit courts in each and every year, to wit, one term commencing on the first Monday in May and the other the first Monday in November of each year. No additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in said district.

SEC. 4. That all civil suits not of a local nature must be brought in the western or eastern division of the district in which the defendant or defendants reside; but if there are two or more defendants, some residing in the western division and others in the eastern, the action may be brought in either of the divisions in which any one of the defendants resides. When the defendant is a non-resident of either division, action may be brought in that division wherein the defendant may be found. Causes removed from any of the courts of the State of Georgia to the circuit court of the United States shall be removed to the circuit court in the division in which said State court is held.

SEC. 5. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the said divisions shall be cognizable within such division; and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed within either of said counties, taken as aforesaid from the southern district, or committed in the southern district as heretofore constituted, shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 6. That civil actions or proceedings now pending at Savannah, in the southern district, in which parties residing in the counties by this act transferred to the northern district are interested, may be transferred, by the consent of all the parties, to the northern district as herein provided; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal entries, shall be transferred to the deputy clerk's office of the court to which they are transferred, and the same shall be proceeded with in all respects as though the case was originally brought therein.

SEC. 7. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division.

SEC. 8. That this act shall be in force from and after the 1st day of August, 1887; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The committee recommended the striking out of the word "Morgan" in the fifth line of the second section.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY.]

Mr. SENEY. This is a matter of purely local concern, interesting probably to the people of Georgia, and to no other locality of the country. I will yield the floor, therefore, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] for ten minutes.

Mr. BARNES. I move to concur in the amendment to strike out the county of Morgan.

The SPEAKER. That is the committee's amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BARNES. I now move to strike out the county of Oglethorpe, in the seventh line of the same section.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. BARNES. There is a clerical error in the eighth section, where provision is made that this bill shall go into operation on the 1st day of August, 1887. I move to strike out these words and insert instead "the 1st day of January, 1889."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. Some of the counties included in this bill are taken from the eastern division of the southern district of the State. I have had no compaint made to me from any of these counties, but would be glad to know if my colleague has taken occasion to satisfy himself that such is the wish of the bar and of the people in those counties.

Mr. BARNES. I certainly have. I have taken the pains to go through the district myself and inquire of the members of the bar in each of the counties which were originally in the southern district of the judicial system of Georgia, and so far as I have been able to ascertain they all desire the passage of this bill.

Mr. CRISP. Has there been any objection so far as my colleague knows to the taking in of these counties from the southern district?

Mr. BARNES. I have received no objection whatever myself. There was one county, I understand, which they wanted to be erased from the eastern division—the county of Oglethorpe. I moved to amend that, and it has been done.

Mr. CRISP. I have heard no objection myself, and did not know if any had been made.

Mr. SENEY. If no gentleman desires to say anything further about this bill I ask that it be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SENEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATENTS VALIDATED.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5673) to give validity to certain patents for inventions which were irregularly executed, and I yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all patents for inventions signed by David L. Hawkins, Second Assistant Secretary of the Interior, shall have the same force, effect, and validity as though the same had been signed by the Secretary of the Interior in person at the date on which they were respectively executed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5673) to give validity to certain patents for inventions which were irregularly executed, having had the same under consideration, report:

That while the statute (section 4883) requires the Secretary of the Interior to sign all patents for inventions, yet many of such patents have recently been signed by David L. Hawkins, Second Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and in his capacity as such Second Assistant Secretary.

Your committee, believing that the statute does not authorize or empower such officer to sign such patents, but believing that such patents so signed ought to be validated, recommend the passage of said bill, it having no other purpose or effect.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I presume there is no need of delaying the House a moment, and if no one wishes to have time I call for a vote.

Mr. BLAND. As this is a bill relating to patents, I think the House should take time to see what is the effect of it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The report has been read, and if attention had been given to the reading it would have been seen there was nothing in the bill requiring a moment's attention. The matter is simply this: That for some little time, on account of a misunderstanding, one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior has been signing officially as Second Assistant Secretary the patents issued. There is no law for that, and this is simply to validate the action.

Mr. BLAND. And what patents will be validated by this bill?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do not know. At this session the House has passed a bill, and I understand it has passed the Senate, giving this same officer, the Second Assistant Secretary of the Interior, the right hereafter to sign the patents. This bill is to validate those patents which he has signed during the last two years. It does not go farther back than two years.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to say a word with reference to this bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WEAVER. I will wait till the gentleman from Ohio gets through.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I yield the gentleman what time he wants.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not see any objection to this bill. In fact, it is right and proper that it should pass. But I want to say I do not see how the Judiciary Committee gets control of a bill of this character. It had no business before the Judiciary Committee, and it was an improper reference. If the bill had any important questions involved in it, I should move its reference to the proper committee. I shall not do so under present circumstances, and content myself with saying that it ought not to have been before that committee.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to make a single suggestion. It is that the evil sought to be cured by this bill has arisen in the case of other officers as well as the one named. I know this by personal inquiry at the Department of the Interior; and I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio the propriety of amending his bill by inserting the words "or any other Assistant Secretary" after the word "Interior," in line 4 of the bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman can move to amend in the way he indicates.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I offer the amendment.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "Interior," insert the words "or any other Assistant Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I think that amendment should be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS, MISSISSIPPI CITY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 1589) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Marion, Perry, and Greene, being a part of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, shall be known as the southern division of said district; and circuit and district courts, for the transaction of business pertaining to the persons and property in said southern division, shall be held at Mississippi City on the third Mondays of February and August in each year.

SEC. 2. That the said courts to be held at Mississippi City, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be possessed of and shall exercise all the powers and jurisdiction now possessed or exercised, or which may hereafter be granted to or exercised, by the circuit and district courts in said district now held at Jackson; and all laws regulating and defining how suits against persons or property located or found in judicial districts shall be brought shall be applicable to and govern the bringing of suits in said division; and all laws touching the removal of causes from State courts to United States courts shall apply to said courts hereby established; but all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said southern district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the clerks of the courts now held at Jackson, on demand of either party to any suit now pending in either of said courts, and properly belonging to the court at Mississippi City, to make out and certify a copy of the record and proceedings in such suit, and to transmit the same to the deputy clerk of the proper court at Mississippi City, who shall enter said cause on his docket, and the same shall be proceeded with as if it had been originally brought in said court. The fees for such transcript shall be paid by the party applying for the same.

SEC. 4. That the marshal and clerks of said southern district of Mississippi shall each appoint a deputy, who shall reside at Mississippi City.

SEC. 5. That the United States shall not be at any expense in providing for a building or room for the holding of the terms of said court.

SEC. 6. That whenever the circuit and district courts in the southern district of Mississippi shall be held at the same time and place, only one grand jury and the necessary number of petit jurors shall be summoned for both courts, and they shall be the grand and petit jurors for both said courts.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW].

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not involve any matter which should provoke debate. It has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously, and it is agreeable to the Representatives of the State of Mississippi. If there is any question about it, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] can state the points which are embodied in the report. If no gentleman desires further light upon the bill, I move that it be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKALEW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SECTION 905, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5666) amending section 905 of the Revised Statutes, and I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 905 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking therefrom the words "or presiding magistrate," in the eigth and ninth lines of said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the words following: "presiding magistrate, or any judge or justice of said court;" so that the section, as amended, shall read as follows:

"SEC. 905. The acts of the Legislature of any State or Territory, or of any country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be authenticated by having the seals of such State, Territory, or country affixed thereto. The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State or Territory, or of any such country, shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief-justice, presiding magistrate, or any judge or justice of said court that the said attestation is in due form; and the said records and judicial proceedings so authenticated shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from which they are taken."

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to amend section 905 of the Revised Statutes. The defect in the existing statute is that in the certification of a record from a court to be used elsewhere it requires that the presiding magistrate or judge or justice of said court shall make the certification. It has been adjudicated in several cases that where the court is composed of more than one member and the presiding magistrate or judge is absent neither of the associates can make a certification which will be valid in law. There are other cases arising in practice under the statute which render it very inconvenient and at times oppressive; and this bill, in order to cure that defect, provides that any one of the associate justices as well as the presiding justice may make a certification, or, in the case of a court composed of a single judge, that the record may be authenticated in due form by the clerk, there being attached thereto the certificate of the judge that he is the clerk of the court, and that the certification is in due form under the seal of the court. That is the whole of the bill. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I now move that it be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, there was some confusion in the Hall when the bill was read, and I ask that it be read again.

The bill was again read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES OFFICIALS, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any Indian hereafter committing against the person of any Indian policeman appointed under the laws of the United States, or against any Indian United States deputy marshal, posse comitatus, or guard, while lawfully engaged in the execution of any United States process' or lawfully engaged in any other duty imposed upon such policeman, deputy marshal, posse comitatus, or guard by the laws of the United States, any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, or assault with intent to kill, within the Indian Territory, or who shall hereafter commit either of the crimes aforesaid, in said Indian Territory, against any person who, at the time of the commission of said crime, or at any time previous thereto, belonged to either of the classes of officials hereinbefore named, because such person, while acting in such capacity, had previously performed or been engaged in the performance of any such duty or service for the United States, shall be subject to the laws of the United States relating to such crimes, and shall be tried by the district court of the United States exercising criminal jurisdiction where such offense was committed, and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes, respectively; and the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 4920, report the same back with the following amendment: Strike out all from and including the word "because," in line 16, down to and inclusive of the words "United States," in line 18.

The bill is simply amendatory of a provision of the Indian appropriation bill approved March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 464), and extends the protection of the United States laws and jurisdiction over the posse comitatus and guards who may be employed by the marshals in the Indian Territory in the execution of United States process. Its necessity is seen in the fact that Indians required to serve in the said capacities have been repeatedly killed in the last few months while on duty by those of their race while under arrest, and in some instances by the friends of the prisoners after the service had been performed; and the Indian courts have either refused or neglected to take any cognizance of the cases or even to apprehend the murderers.

The committee believe that all officers of the Government should have the shield of the law's protection thrown around them in the execution of its process, and that if the Indian government will not afford protection in its own courts that the United States should do so.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with the amendment.

The Committee on the Judiciary recommended an amendment striking out from lines 16, 17, and 18 of the bill the words, "because such person, while acting in such capacity, had previously performed or been engaged in the performance of any such duty or service for the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary have also instructed me to move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "Indian," in line 4, the words "agent or;" so that it will read, "any Indian agent or policeman," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I am instructed also to move to amend in line 8, by inserting after the word "such" the word "agent;" so that it will read, "duty imposed upon such agent, policeman, deputy marshal," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 11, by striking out the word "kill" and substituting the word "murder."

Mr. ROGERS. I accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker. The word "kill" was used by an inadvertence.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the bill be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SECTION 905 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, in the bill H. R. 5666, which passed the House a few moments ago, there is an omission or oversight which I ask unanimous consent to correct. In the first place, the bill mentions the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any "State, Territory, or country," and then, after describing the manner of certification of records, it provides at the end that proceedings so authenticated shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court of the United States as they have by law or usage "in the courts of the State from which they are taken." I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill by adding after the word "State," in that last clause, the word "Territory, or country," so as to make the two parts of the bill harmonious.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, these words will be inserted without the formality of reconsideration.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

TERMS OF COURT IN IOWA.

Mr. COLLINS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6051) regulating the times for holding the terms of the United States courts in the northern district of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in and for the northern district of Iowa shall be held as follows: At Sioux City on the first Tuesdays in October and May; at Fort Dodge on the second Tuesday of November and first Tuesday in June; at Dubuque on the fourth Tuesday of November and the first Tuesday in April.

Mr. FULLER. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. FULLER) was read, as follows:

It appears that the changes desired in the terms for holding the courts are for the convenience of the persons having business before the court during the winter season. The judge for that district states, in referring to this bill:

"The only material change is in case of Fort Dodge, from January to November. I have consulted the bar here (Fort Dodge), and they are anxious to have the change made to avoid the difficulty resulting from the snow blockades. These times will not conflict with terms of State courts." * * *

This bill simply changes the time for holding the terms of the court, and your committee recommends that the bill pass.

Mr. FULLER. This bill is entirely of a local nature, changing the terms of court in the northern district of Iowa. The only material change is at Fort Dodge, and that is desired for the convenience of the bar and the judge. I ask for a vote on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FULLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COUNTY OF AUDRAIN, MISSOURI.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 6831) to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, be detached from the eastern, and attached to the western judicial district of the State of Missouri.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed so as to affect suits and prosecutions which may be pending.

Mr. CULBERSON. This bill is of a local nature, and there is no objection to it.

Mr. HATCH. I will state that in the bill which passed the last Congress the county of Audrain, Missouri, was, by mistake, attached to the eastern district. It had been arranged between my colleague and myself that this county should be attached to the western district; but an error, which was then made in draughting the bill, renders it proper to make the correction now.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANIMALS IMPORTED FOR BREEDING PURPOSES.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (S. 1564) for the relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes in certain cases. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be taken up in the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will submit the gentleman's request.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit to any and all firms or persons who shall have, prior to the passage of this act, in good faith, and in compliance with the decisions and regulations of the Treasury Department, specially imported into the United States animals for breeding purposes, whether for the importer's own use or for sale, all duties, if any shall have accrued, upon such importations.

SEC. 2. In all actions now pending in behalf of and in the courts of the United States for the recovery of any duty or duties upon the importation of animals heretofore made for the purposes aforesaid, and in accordance with said decisions and regulations, such remission of duties by the Secretary of the Treasury, or the fact, when established by competent evidence, that such animals were imported by the defendant or defendants for breeding purposes, whether for such use by the importers or for sale, shall be a sufficient defense in any such action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill? The Chair hears no objection.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CASWELL. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CASWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration Senate bill 1564, for the relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes, and recommend that the same be passed.

The reasons for this recommendation are found in Report No. 215, made by the Senate committee, which report is adopted, attached hereto, and made a part of this report.

"The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1564) for relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes in certain cases, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

"The object of the bill is one purely of relief. Its necessity grows out of facts which may be briefly stated thus:

"Subdivision A of section 642 of the free-list is as follows:

"'Animals specially imported for breeding purposes shall be admitted free, upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as he may prescribe.'

"This statute has been uniformly construed by the Treasury Department, and the regulations promulgated have been in harmony with this construction, to authorize the importation duty free of live-stock for breeding purposes, whether for the importer's own use or for sale, and such importations have been constantly made into the different States upon the faith of this construction and in compliance with these regulations.

"Recently, by decisions of Federal judges in Texas and Illinois, the section has been restricted in its operation to animals imported for the importer's own use, and one or two suits are now pending to recover duties upon this construction of the law.

"The manifest purpose of the law was to stimulate the importation from all countries of animals for breeding purposes, in order that the stock of our own country might thereby be improved. To restrict its provisions to those intended for the importer's own use narrows its scope and largely impairs its usefulness.

"The construction and regulations of the Treasury Department have been adopted in this view.

"But the committee does not feel called upon by this measure to deal with the question of construction. Every consideration of good faith and fair dealing demands, whatever may be finally deemed the correct interpretation of the statute, that those who have, in good faith and in compliance with the construction adopted and the regulations promulgated by the Treasury Department, made importations should be protected as to such transactions. The bill in question is limited to this purpose.

"The Secretary of the Treasury, to whom the bill was referred, states as follows:

"'If the animals to which it is presumed such bill has reference were of a blooded grade, and valuable mainly for their breeding qualities, and were imported by citizens of the United States with that purpose in view, they were entitled to free entry under such regulations, and I am of opinion that the provisions of said bill may be considered as affording a fair measure of relief to such importers who were required to pay duty on animals of the character mentioned.'

"In view of the foregoing your committee recommend that the bill pass as amended."

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me this bill ought to have been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. I do not see how the Committee on the Judiciary obtained jurisdiction of a measure changing the tariff laws. I think that committee ought to be willing now to have the bill referred to our committee.

Mr. CASWELL. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary upon the theory that it related to some pending suits.

Mr. MILLS. This is not a private relief bill?

Mr. CASWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS. It is a general law?

Mr. CASWELL. It is a general relief bill.

Mr. MILLS. Does this bill propose to change the existing law?

Mr. OATES. It does not. It is simply designed to grant relief from penalties already incurred.

Mr. MILLS. I think the Committee on the Judiciary ought to agree that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If this bill has been properly considered by the Judiciary Committee, why is it necessary that its passage should now be delayed by another reference?

Mr. ADAMS. A letter which I recently received from farmers of Iowa with reference to this bill gave me occasion to go to the other end of the Capitol to ascertain the origin of the measure. I found that two bills had been introduced there. One, which would have been liable to the objection made by the gentleman from Texas, was laid upon the table there for that reason; but this bill was passed, as I understand, on the ground that it did not affect the tariff laws, and therefore could legitimately originate in the other end of the Capitol. I think the gentleman will find, on examination, that this is a very different bill from the other measure which was laid on the table because obnoxious to the objection now raised by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that this bill repeals certain penalties.

Mr. ROWELL. It remits penalties; does not repeal them.

Mr. MILLS. Does not the bill change the existing law at all?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill grants relief to certain persons who have heretofore imported animals for breeding purposes.

Mr. MILLS. I asked whether this was a private relief bill, and was informed that it was not.

Mr. HATCH. Can not the bill be read again?

The bill was again read.

Mr. MILLS. I think that bill should have gone to the Committee on Ways and Means, but seeing the scope of it I will not interpose further objection.

Mr. CRAIN. I should like to have the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] in charge of the bill explain to the House what it means. My impression is it refers to certain cases which occurred in the western district of Texas, in which parties were charged with evasion of the tariff laws, and to certain cases which are pending in which they were also charged with smuggling. The United States Government in the cases to which I have referred recovered judgment to the amount of the duties on the animals which were imported. The intention of this law is to undo the work of the court. If I am wrong I should like to have the gentleman explain it.

Mr. CASWELL. The law places upon the free-list all blooded animals imported for breeding purposes. The language used is:

Animals specially imported for breeding purposes shall be admitted free of duty on proof thereof to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Under the terms of the regulations adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury many people have gone on and imported blooded stock. Where blooded stock was imported for breeding purposes it was permitted under the regulations to come in duty free. It may have been taken to Texas or elsewhere.

It has been decided by some judge if they have been imported for sale and not for the owner's use they come within the law and are subject to duty. But under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury they have been permitted to import blooded stock for breeding purposes, either for use or to sell to other parties. If imported for breeding purposes they could do so for their own use or to sell to other parties as they saw fit. It was not considered to be important who owned them if they were imported for breeding purposes. The decision of a judge has been that if the stock was imported for sale it was not therefore imported for breeding purposes. Some collectors of customs have made decisions in conflict with the regulations of the Treasury Department. Some suits have been commenced by local district attorneys contrary to the same regulations. If these were allowed they would ruin and bankrupt a large number of parties in the country; that is, if these parties were obliged to go back and pay duties on blooded animals which were imported for breeding purposes but sold to other parties.

This bill has been introduced for the relief of all parties who have acted in good faith and imported blooded stock for breeding purposes, whether they sold to other parties or for their own use, there really being no difference when the stock has been imported for breeding purposes.

The bill was introduced to affect cases where suits had been brought. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and not to the Committee on Ways and Means, as it did not in any way affect the levying of duties, but simply provides those duties shall be remitted if it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Treasury Department the blooded stock was imported in good faith for breeding purposes. It provides in those suits it shall be a sufficient answer that they were so imported in good faith. Where legal proceedings are commenced it is provided it shall be a sufficient answer also in those cases. If blooded stock have been imported for breeding purposes and sold immediately, and suit be brought to recover duties on it, on being shown to the satisfaction of the court it was imported for breeding purposes shall be a sufficient answer to the court. Where animals in good faith have been imported under these regulations of the Treasury Department, whether for the purpose of sale or for use, it shall be a sufficient answer to all legal proceedings under this statute, and that is the reason why it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary instead of to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Secretary of the Treasury construes the free-list differently from the way it is now construed in Illinois and Texas. For instance, the free-list reads as follows:

Animals specially imported for breeding purposes shall be admitted free upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

This statute has been uniformly construed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the regulations promulgated by that Department have been in harmony with that construction, to authorize the importation duty free of all live-stock for breeding purposes, whether for the importer's own use or for sale.

The courts of the United States in the State of Texas and in the State of Illinois have decided this regulation of the Treasury Department was improper, and under the free-list these animals could not be imported into the United States except for the importer's own use. It has resulted the importers who, under the direction of the Treasury Department, have imported this character of stock into the United States for the purpose of sale are now being sued in the courts for violation of the statute.

This bill provides that all those persons who have been sued or who may be sued for the violation of this statute, before this construction was made by the courts, shall have the penalties imposed upon them remitted, because of the fact that they acted upon the regulations of the Treasury Department in good faith in importing the stock. That is all this bill proposes.

Mr. CRAIN. Will my colleague allow an interruption?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. How is this fact to be established? Does the bill provide for that?

Mr. CULBERSON. I presume that will be ascertained by the court.

Mr. CRAIN. But if the cases have been already tried?

Mr. CULBERSON. I suppose it will appear from the record of the case when the animals were imported, as I understand it.

I yield the floor now to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. As I understand this bill, it is simply to give emphasis to the interpretation of the law which has been placed upon it by the Secretary of the Treasury. For many years the Secretary has interpreted the law so as to permit the importation of blooded horses and cattle free of duty; and under that interpretation many men in the Western States, notably in the State of Illinois, have invested large sums of money in the business. In the district which I represent one gentleman alone for the last fifteen years has imported all the way from $100,000 to $500,000 per annum in value of blooded animals, and has done it under the interpretation of the law as given him by the Secretary of the Treasury. During the last summer one of the custom-house officers near Detroit insisted that unless the importer could swear that the stock which he imported was to be kept by himself for breeding purposes that it was subject to 20 per cent. duty.

That matter was brought before the courts, and the circuit judge up there held that the proper interpretation of the law was that unless the importer himself was the breeder of these animals, this 20 per cent. duty could be collected. The result, as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], would be disastrous to all of these importers. It would destroy this industry, which is so rapidly improving the stock of this country; and this bill is simply to give emphasis, I repeat, to the interpretation as given by the proper Department to protect these men who have invested their money under that interpretation, and to afford them a defense to any suit that may be brought against them for importations heretofore made free of duty.

Mr. CASWELL. I move the previous question upon the third reading of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I desire, if the gentleman will permit me, to ask a question.

Mr. CASWELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to inquire what the effect of the bill would be under such circumstances as these: One gentleman in my county has imported for years past a great many fine sheep; and the Wabash Importing Company has introduced into the State a great many very fine horses. The Department, by a letter addressed to me, decided that under the law these importations came in free. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman if I understand this bill is to confirm that decision of the Department?

Mr. CASWELL. That is the effect of this bill. It confirms that construction of the law, and relieves them from the duty.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me for a question?

Mr. CASWELL. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to ask the gentleman who reports this bill if, in his judgment, it will cover those cases in which appeals have been taken from the collector's ruling, requiring the payment of this duty, and the appeal sustained upon the simple ground that the animals, while imported for breeding purposes, were imported to be sold by the importer?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir. It is intended to cover and does cover all such cases.

Mr. JACKSON. Then I will cheerfully support the bill and hope it will pass. I know of cases in my part of the country deserving of relief that this law will cover. I desire to call attention of the House to the fact that this law only applies to importations of animals to improve our own stock and breeds. They are such animals as we do not raise in this country, and do not come in competition with those raised by our own people. It is only such as are expected to be a benefit to the breeds we have that are covered by it. This legislation is in the interest of improvement of our breeds of stock, is most commendable, and should be encouraged. I am glad to be able to say that the people of the district I have the honor to represent have for many years taken great interest in the breeding of fine cattle, sheep, swine, and horses; that much time and large amounts of money have been spent in those industries, and with the most satisfactory results. The men who have so interested themselves are public benefactors, and have rendered inestimable services to the farmers and stock-raisers, not only of my own State but many others. Believing this bill to be in the interests of men who would still further improve the breeds and quality of our stock of farm animals, I desire to urge its passage.

Mr. OATES. I wish, with the consent of the gentleman from Wisconsin, to ask a question before the previous question is demanded.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. OATES. This bill, in the second section, provides that there shall be a defense in pending suits for the recovery of the penalty where it has been incurred. Now, that does not of itself work an amendment of the law. May there not be other cases occurring hereafter in which that provision will not apply? How will this change the law covering such cases?

Mr. CASWELL. I will say to the gentleman that this does not pretend to affect the future operations of the law. There is a bill pending before the committee now which applies to the future, and it was not desirable to encumber this in the form in which it came from the Senate.

Mr. OATES. It seems to me that the bill ought to be so amended.

Mr. CASWELL. This bill came from the Senate in its present form and has not been amended by the committee. I prefer that it should pass in its present form, and consider the other question presented by the gentleman from Alabama in a separate bill.

Mr. CRAIN. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does his bill provide how the court is to be satisfied—or the Secretary of the Treasury—that the importations have been made in good faith for the objects stated? Trials have been had; there is no record of the testimony, except in case of appeals. The judge kept no record of the facts; the district attorney has none. How will you establish the fact that the importations have been made in good faith?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Take the affidavit of the importer.

Mr. CASWELL. The bill says:

The fact, when established by competent evidence——

Mr. CRAIN. That refers to the future.

Mr. CASWELL. It says:

The fact, when established by competent evidence, that such animals were imported by the defendant or defendants for breeding purposes, whether for such use by the importers or for sale, shall be a sufficient defense in any such action.

Mr. CRAIN. That is for future cases.

Mr. CASWELL. No, sir; that applies to the past. If a suit is pending the parties come in with an answer, setting up the facts, and on its being proved before the court that the animals were imported for breeding purposes and in compliance with the regulations of the Treasury Department, that is a sufficient defense before the court.

Mr. CRAIN. But if the bill provides not only for pending cases but for cases already decided, how are you to upset the judgment of the court?

Mr. CASWELL. The Secretary of the Treasury, if the judgment was collected, would remit the amount paid.

Mr. CRAIN. Does the bill authorize that?

Mr. CASWELL. It does. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFENDERS TO BE ARRESTED IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8394) to authorize United States marshals to arrest offenders and fugitives from justice in the Indian Territory. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the passage of this act any United States marshal is hereby authorized and required, when necessary to execute any process issued out of the circuit or district court of the United States for the district of which he is marshal, or by any commissioner of either of said courts, to enter the Indian Territory and to execute the same therein in the same manner that he is now required by law to execute processes in his own district.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 6163, report the same back and ask that it lie on the table, and also report a substitute therefor.

The bill simply provides that any United States marshal who has in his hands for execution any criminal process, duly issued out of the district or circuit court of the United States for the district of which he is marshal, or by any commissioner of such court, shall be authorized to enter the Indian Territory and execute the same against the person named in the writ, in the same manner that he is now authorized to execute process in his own district. The necessity for this grows out of the well-known fact that criminals from all parts of the country have taken refuge in the Indian country, in violation of the intercourse law and the treaties with the Indian tribes, and remain there in security because no method has been prescribed by law whereby they may be apprehended and brought to justice. It is believed this bill, if passed, will tend to purge that country of that class of men, diminish crime, and relieve the Indians of grossly demoralizing influences and grievous annoyances.

Mr. ROGERS. Unless some inquiry is made, I move the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Lamar, Fannin, Red River, and Delta, in the State of Texas, be, and they are hereby, detached from the northern judicial district of the said State, and that the same be, and are hereby, attached to the eastern judicial district of said State.

SEC. 2. That the portion of the Choctaw Nation within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning on Red River at the southeast corner of the Choctaw Nation; thence north with the boundary line between the said Choctaw Nation and the State of Arkansas to a point where Big Creek, a tributary of the Black Fork of the Kimishi River, crosses the said boundary line; thence westerly with Big Creek and the said Black Fork to the junction of the said Black Fork with Buffalo Creek; thence northwesterly with said Buffalo Creek to a point where the same is crossed by the old military road from Fort Smith, Ark., to Boggy Depot, in the Choctaw Nation; thence southwesterly with the said road to where the same crosses Perryville Creek; thence northwesterly up said creek to where the same is crossed by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway track; thence with the center of the main line of the said railway in a southerly direction to where the said road crosses North or Muddy Boggy; thence down said stream to its junction with Middle Boggy; thence down Middle Boggy to where it crosses the western boundary line of Kimishi County, Choctaw Nation; thence southerly with the western boundary line of said county to Red River; thence down said Red River to the place of beginning; and all that territory in the said Choctaw Nation included within the boundaries hereinbefore set out, be, and the same is hereby, attached to the eastern judicial district of the State of Texas for judicial purposes.

SEC. 4. That all process, civil and criminal, issued against citizens of the said counties of Lamar, Fannin, Red River, and Delta, cognizable before the United States courts, be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Paris, Tex.

SEC. 5. That the territory of the Indian Territory occupied by the Chickasaw Indians, and that part of the territory of the Choctaw Nation embraced in the following limits, to wit: Beginning on Red River at the point where the western boundary line of Kimishi County, Choctaw Nation, reaches said river; thence north along the western boundary line of the said county to the point where the same crosses Middle Boggy River; thence up the said stream to its junction with the North or Muddy Boggy; thence up said last-mentioned stream to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway track; thence northerly up the center of the main track of the said road to the South Canadian River; thence up the center of the main channel of the said river to the western boundary line of the Chickasaw Nation, the same being the northwest corner of the said nation; thence south on the boundary line between the said nation and the reservation of the Wichita Indians; thence continuing south with the boundary line between the said Chickasaw Nation and the reservations of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians to Red River; thence down said river to the place of beginning, and all that territory of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations embraced within the boundaries set forth in this section be, and the same is hereby, attached to the northern judicial district of the State of Texas for judicial purposes.

SEC. 6. That the counties of Grayson, Montague, and Cooke, in the State of Texas, and all of the Chickasaw Nation, and that portion of the territory of the Choctaw Nation embraced within the limits of the boundaries set out in section 5 of this act, shall hereafter constitute a division of the northern judicial district of the State of Texas; and that a term of the circuit and district courts of the United States for said northern district shall be held twice in each year at the city of Denison, State of Texas, on the first Mondays of March and September; and the United States courts herein provided to be held at the city of Denison shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed within the limits of the Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, and in that part of the territory of the Choctaw Nation embraced within the limits of the boundaries set out in section 5 of this act, against the laws of the United States that are now or that may hereafter be operative therein.

SEC. 7. That all process, civil and criminal, issued against citizens of the counties of Grayson, Cooke, and Montague, in the State of Texas, cognizable before the courts of the United States, shall be made returnable to the said courts at the said city of Denison, Tex.

SEC. 8. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The following amendments were recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary:

Amend, in the sixth section, by striking out "counties" and inserting "county," and by striking out "Montague and Cooke."

Amend section 7, line 2, by striking out "counties" and inserting "county," and by striking out "Cooke and Montague."

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for a vote on the amendments.

The amendments were adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas what is the object and purpose of this bill, and how far it affects the jurisdiction over the Indian Territory now provided for by law?

Mr. CULBERSON. In reply to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Mississippi, I will state that under existing law the court of the western district of the State of Arkansas has jurisdiction over the five semi-civilized Indian tribes, the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, the Creeks, the Seminoles, and the Cherokees. That court has cognizance of all offenses committed against the United States in that Territory.

One of the objects of this bill is simply to detach the Chickasaw Nation and half of the Choctaw Nation from that jurisdiction and attach them to the United States judicial district of the State of Texas for the same judicial purpose. It has no other effect whatever. That change will make it more convenient for the people of the Chickasaw Nation and that part of the Choctaw Nation which is taken away to attend the courts in Texas than to go to Fort Smith, and it will relieve the court at Fort Smith of a large amount of business; and that court, if not overloaded, is certainly now oppressed by the amount of its business.

Mr. HOOKER. The explanation of the gentleman is satisfactory.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURIES IN WRITING.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6896) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing in certain cases, and I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on the trial of all civil and criminal cases in the circuit and district courts of the United States the judge shall charge the jury in writing, if the charge is required to be so given by either party, and notice of such requisition is given before the argument to the jury is commenced.

Mr. OATES. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. I think this bill imposes upon the judges of the United States circuit and district courts an unnecessary labor, and a labor that will, in districts and circuits like California, retard the proceedings in cases. This bill will require the judges to reduce their charges to writing. As the law now is, after a case has been argued and submitted, the judge charges the jury, which he may do orally, and of course the proceedings are not at all retarded by reason of the formal preparation of the charge. In districts where the trial of cases occupies but short terms and there is no difficulty about time for the disposition of the business of the court, this will perhaps work no hardship. But in my district, the district of San Francisco, where the United States courts are already overwhelmed with business, and where the judges have no time to spare in the preparation of their charges in writing, this requirement would interfere very seriously with the progress of business. If Congress would provide short-hand writers for the courts so that the judges could have assistance in the business of the court and in taking down their charges this would be all well enough. I understand very well that in many States it is provided that the judges shall, as this bill provides, charge the jury in writing; but in those cases it is also provided that the court shall have the services of a short-hand writer. And in such cases the judge may avail himself of the services of the stenographer in reducing his instructions to writing; but Congress does not provide stenographers for the circuit or district judges, and the result will be that they will be compelled after the case has been submitted to take the time required to prepare their instructions in writing. Now, I am sure that in San Francisco the bar would protest strongly against this extra work and delay being imposed upon the judges, because it would greatly retard the proceedings of the courts, and would prevent the trial of cases with that degree of life and speed which we have and ought to continue to have in order to get on with our calendar. Even as it is, the courts are very much behind in some of their business. I hope the bill will not pass unless we are prepared to also provide short-hand reporters for the judges in order to enable them to perform the work which this bill imposes upon them.

Mr. BREWER. Could not this bill be so amended as to relieve the courts of this duty when there is a stenographer employed?

Mr. MORROW. I am sure I do not see how it could be amended in that way. If there could be some such amendment as that, of course it would obviate one of the serious objections to this bill. But the difficulty is that, in general, stenographers are employed in the courts only by the parties, and such an employment as that would not relieve the judges in this matter. Parties go into court and sometimes one side and sometimes both sides employ a short-hand reporter for their own assistance or convenience, but the judge gets no advantage or assistance from that employment. The Government ought to employ a stenographer for the court as it employs other court officers. In that way the court might be able to do this work.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] that my experience is that the judge can regulate these matters by requiring that all instructions which either party desire to have given to the jury shall be prepared by the attorneys and presented to him for his consideration. There is another fact in connection with it, and that is, that there is more time spent in preparing and settling a case made than would be required for the judge to prepare his instructions in writing at the time of the trial. It is of the utmost importance in every case that is of sufficient weight to be tried in a United States court that the instructions of the judge shall be reduced to writing, not only because it is necessary for the attorneys and the litigants to know exactly what the court's instructions are, but also because it is desirable that those instructions shall go out with the jury, so that they may have them before them to consult in making up their verdict upon the case.

Now, if those instructions are given orally it is impossible for the jury to remember them, and then, as I said before, after the case is determined and the verdict is brought in more of the time of the judge is consumed in settling just what his instructions were and in preparing the case made for a higher court, whenever there is an appeal, than would be consumed in preparing his instructions in writing during the trial. There is no United States district judge or circuit judge in the United States who can not prepare his instructions on almost every point during the progress of the trial, and have them ready for the jury as soon as the evidence is in, or as soon as arguments have been closed. In some States the law requires that the judge shall instruct the jury in writing. I think that is the rule in most of the States. In some States it requires that the judge shall instruct the jury in writing immediately after the evidence has been closed; in others, that he shall instruct them after the arguments have been submitted. At all events, during the progress of any cause where evidence is being introduced the judge has time to prepare instructions in writing, and if he has not time to do it himself, he can require the attorneys on each side to put in writing and submit to him their requests for instructions to the jury.

Mr. MCKENNA. Is it not a fact that the judges in the Federal courts instruct on matters of fact?

Mr. PETERS. It is.

Mr. MCKENNA. Would it not be almost impossible for them to do that and do it in writing? Would it not be absolutely impracticable?

Mr. PETERS. The judges in the United States courts do not detail the facts to the jury. They instruct as to the bearing of certain facts in connection with the law.

Mr. WARNER. They do not pretend to tell the jury what the facts are.

Mr. PETERS. As suggested by my friend from Missouri, they do not pretend to state what the facts are. They merely state their conclusions and make application of the facts to the law.

Mr. MCKENNA. Is not a recital of the facts necessary for the balancing of the evidence all the way through?

Mr. PETERS. No, sir.

Mr. MCKENNA. How in the world would the instructions amount to anything otherwise?

Mr. PETERS. The instructions amount simply to an application of the facts to the law as the court presents it. I presume my friend will not pretend that it is the practice in any United States court for the judge in his charge to detail to the jury what has already been presented as evidence.

Mr. MCKENNA. He is not to assume the facts.

Mr. PETERS. He is not to detail the facts which have been given in evidence, because that would be simply a reiteration of what the witnesses have presented to the jury. But conceding the position of the gentleman from California to be correct—and it may be so far as United States judges in California are concerned, though it certainly is not in regard to United States judges in Kansas, Missouri, or any other portion of that circuit—conceding it to be true that the judge is to make a recital of the facts to the jury, then in order to be able to do this he must take minutes of the testimony as presented; hence he has the testimony in shape to be presented to the jury with his written instructions when the evidence is closed.

Mr. FORD. This bill requires nothing more in the United States courts than is now required by the States in the State courts.

Mr. PETERS. As suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], this measure requires nothing more than the statutes of the States require now in the State courts.

Mr. MORROW. It is true that in many States the judges are required to reduce their charges to writing. But, as I have said, there are two things to be taken into consideration in that connection: First, the judge has the assistance of a stenographer during the trial of the case, and also, if necessary, in reducing his charge to writing; in the second place, in the State courts, where that rule prevails, the judge charges the jury with reference merely to the law, and, as the gentleman from Kansas himself just pointed out, the judge adopts or rejects what he thinks proper in the instructions submitted by the attorneys on both sides. But in the United States courts the judge, in his charge to the jury, refers to the testimony; he sums up the facts of the case, so to speak, and then applies the law to those facts. Now, as he has not the assistance of a stenographer in the preparation of his charge, if we require the charge to be reduced to writing, the result will be that unless Congress provides stenographers for the United States courts we impose upon the judge an amount of labor which must tend to retard proceedings in the court. That is the point I make

Mr. PETERS. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] I will state—and I make the statement because I have had some experience—that no judge can intelligently try a case involving any considerable amount of testimony unless he makes minutes of the testimony during the trial; and if he does so, he has those minutes ready to be incorporated in his written charge.

But one great objection to allowing a judge to give oral instructions to a jury is the fact that in doing so the judge very frequently descends from the high position he should occupy in administering the law and makes an argument as counsel to the jury.

Mr. MORROW. That is the fault of the judge.

Mr. PETERS. I concede that it is the fault of the judge, and I do not wish to have in operation any law which allows a judge to commit that fault. We have to legislate for a large number of judges throughout the United States, and we should frame our law, if possible, so as to prevent any abuse, and I think we are legislating to this end by requiring the United States judge to reduce his instructions to writing in every case.

Mr. MCKENNA. If a stenographer were provided for the court, would that be a remedy?

Mr. PETERS. It would be a remedy to a considerable extent. In all the districts of our State we have stenographers in our State courts; and there ought to be a stenographer in every United States court. But no case of any importance is ever tried now before a United States court unless there is a stenographer employed either by one party or the other.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, this bill is very brief and easily understood. It proposes simply to require the judges of the United States circuit courts in the trial of jury cases to give their instructions to the jury in writing when demanded by either party, and when notice is given to the court before the argument of counsel begins. We propose to require this notice, so as to afford the judge ample opportunity for putting his instructions in writing.

The objection raised by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], that this requirement would embarrass the business of the court, is not, I think, well taken. It may, and ought to, have the effect of cutting short the speech which the judge frequently makes in the form of a charge, and which is more valuable to either side to which he may incline than the argument of counsel for that side.

This requirement will make the judge concise; it will make him careful as to what instructions he gives to a jury. This is right. It is an ancient maxim of the law—and none is wiser—that judges should not be encouraged to follow the crooked cord of discretion rather than the golden metewand of the law.

The requirement which this bill proposes to apply to the judges in our Federal courts has prevailed for a number of years in the courts of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. Instead of embarrassing the business of the court, its tendency and effect have been to facilitate business. The appeals are fewer in consequence of this provision of law, although the writing out of charges is rarely demanded. Only in cases of great magnitude, or where it is discovered during the proceedings that the judge has a bias or prejudice against one side or the other, do the parties desire the charge to be put in writing.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. In the practice of the gentleman's State, does the judge instruct before or after the argument of counsel?

Mr. OATES. He instructs after the argument of counsel; and in my judgment he should do so in all cases. Wherever the judge instructs the jury before the argument of counsel begins, he lays down rules by which he hedges in the counsel, requiring them to argue the case on lines of his selection. For that reason, in my judgment, it is an objectionable practice.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. One further question about your State practice. Where written instructions are given to the jury, are those the instructions prepared by the counsel on either side, or does the judge write out his own instructions?

Mr. OATES. Under the law of my State, where notice is given, the judge must write his charge in chief. He generally makes it very brief, to cover the points of law involved. He delivers it to the jury, and then it is the right of counsel on the respective sides to ask whatever other instructions in writing they deem proper.

That will be one of the effects of the law. The judge will be concise in delivering his charge. He will travel over as little space as possible to save him from manual labor. If it is not extensive enough, if it is not satisfactory, they have the right to present written instructions to meet every phase of the case.

It can work no hardship, and is in the interest of even-handed and exact justice. The institution of courts for trial of causes can have no purpose unless that purpose be to administer justice between man and man and between the Government and men. Everything which adds to the administration of justice according to the well-ascertained rules of the law is to my mind always commendable.

I can conceive of no well-founded objection to this proposed law in any respect. Wherever a judge desires to influence the action of a jury except within the line strictly of the law, it is going outside of his line of duty. He is not judge of the fact in jury cases, but of the law, and when he gives them the law, as he can easily do in a brief charge, that is as far as he should go, unless when requested by one of the parties.

Mr. MORROW. What is the objection to the oral charge to the jury?

Mr. OATES. The objection is there are cases—I have in my limited experience witnessed more than one—where from some cause the judge has in his charge to the jury made a better for one speech of the parties than his attorney.

Mr. MORROW. Did he make no mistake in that charge?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir. I have seen them make mistakes, perhaps intentionally.

Mr. MORROW. Did not you take exception?

Mr. OATES. A skillful judge may put it in a form so no mortal man can except.

Mr. MORROW. Why should not an exception lie?

Mr. OATES. Exception lies on the part of the law, but when the judge is permitted to go beyond that into the facts and give construction he can employ many modes by which he can influence the jury in a manner he ought not to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Because when the exception is heard the charge of the judge can carry the jury with him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Discussion must proceed in order. Gentlemen must not be interrupted without their consent.

Mr. OATES. There can be no appeal where the amount does not exceed $2,000. That is an additional reason why this should be the law.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me? I wish to suggest when the judge comes to make up his case on oral instructions he has it in his power to say, "I gave such and such instructions."

Mr. OATES. Besides that, every lawyer knows, who has had much practice, how difficult it is sometimes for him to get an exception to an oral charge. I have seen charges that were radically wrong, made by the omission of a word that the judge intended to use, perhaps, but did not. I do not care to consume any more time.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute or two before he concludes?

Mr. OATES. I will yield to the gentleman from California for one minute.

Mr. MORROW. I appreciate the argument made by the gentleman from Alabama, but the difficulty he states relates more to the character and official conduct of the judge than to the administration of the law. It is my experience, and I think it must be the experience of other lawyers here, that where the judge is an able and an honest man, if he goes to the jury with a charge beyond the law and that is called to his attention while the matter is fresh, he can do more for justice and for the proper administration of the law in its immediate correction than were he to wait until after the matter had passed out of his mind in the labor of preparing a written charge. Furthermore, in this delay opportunity is given to counsel to invoke technical points not always in aid of the due administration of the law.

My experience is that, in the interest of justice, a case should go to the jury fresh from the judge, with oral instructions covering the whole case, and with all the important facts brought out in proper order. There is a great difference between the impression made by the formal reading of a document and an oral address to the jury in a style and manner that direct the attention to leading facts.

Written instructions simply mean the formulation of abstract propositions drawn by attorneys to attract the attention of the jury to one side or the other, but generally in such a technical form as to confuse rather than to explain the important features of the case.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman, if one of the parties to a suit prefers to have the charge written, why should he not have that privilege?

Mr. MORROW. For the reason that under the law as proposed here, if it passes, and it is required to be written out, it is going to retard the proceedings of the court and make formal and rigid the instructions of the judge.

He must get down, so to speak, off his bench and with the drudgery of a clerk or lawyer go carefully over the minutes of the case and prepare his charge in that way. It simply delays the proceedings of the court without any possible advantage.

Mr. LONG. Another reason, as I understood the gentleman, is that it will result in inconvenience.

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. Why should not the court inconvenience the parties to litigation if it leads to justice?

Mr. MORROW. I do not think it will have that tendency. It will lead to inconvenience without any good effect. It will take from the case its life and truth. The oral charge, to my mind, comes nearer to the actual facts of a case than any possible written statement.

Mr. OATES. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from California I wish to say but a word. His argument proceeds upon the assumption, I take it, that the judge is incapable of error. But as to what is justice in a given case the judge and himself may very radically differ.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OATES. Certainly. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I wish to submit a question to the gentleman from Alabama, but will put my question more in the form of a suggestion to supplement what has been said already by the gentleman from California.

It is my experience and observation that in the trial of these causes in the Federal courts the presiding judge, who sits there impartially between the parties, is more capable of giving a correct synopsis of the case and correct conclusions to the jury than the counsel on either side. This bill seems to be aimed at the argument it is claimed that the judge sometimes makes to a jury in a case, causing them to decide one way or the other according to his wishes. The point of my suggestion, therefore, is this: If the bill is adopted and made into a law, will it not result in extra expense to the litigants? Because, if the presiding judge is deprived of aiding the jury in arriving at what he thinks is a just conclusion by instructions as now practiced in Federal courts, and the jury give a verdict contrary to his idea of right or justice, it is not difficult to foresee that delays and additional expense to litigants must be involved by the granting of new trials.

Mr. OATES. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Very well; I will not consume more of the gentleman's time.

Mr. OATES. The answer to that is that judges are not always perfectly fair and impartial, even when they think they are; and wherever a judge is permitted to charge a jury on the effect of the evidence, and tell them substantially what they ought to do, it is an invasion of the province of the jury, and to carry it out to its legitimate consequences we had as well abolish the jury altogether.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to do hardly more than to express my serious doubts of the wisdom of this bill.

I believe the argument upon the bill has confounded two separate things—one, the desirability of reducing to writing everything the judge says to the jury, in order that no error may be committed, or that any error may be corrected, and any man injured thereby may have an opportunity to point it out in appealing to a higher court upon the error.

But there is a very different proposition involved in the idea that the judge shall never deliver any instructions to the jury which have not previously been reduced to writing. That I conceive to be an error in the bill, though many gentlemen around me, I am aware, regard that as among the palladia of liberty.

The answer of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], that the judge can save labor by getting the attorneys to draw the instructions they may point out to him, is what seems to me to be the real error in the case. I believe it is not conducive to a plain elucidation of the truth, for the understanding of the jury, to have the statement of that truth embraced in one set of instructions prepared by the attorney representing one side of the case and supplemented by another set of instructions prepared from the point of view of the other side of the case.

Let us provide for stenographers, so that everything the judge says may be reduced to writing. Let the judge have the right to instruct in writing, if he chooses to do so, and let the judge have also the right, as I believe he has now, to supplement those written instructions; but do not cut off the judge from making a plain statement of fact, either of law or upon the facts, if you choose, or upon the law as applicable to the facts, which shall be immediately reduced to writing, so that any litigant who thinks he has been injured thereby may have his plain remedy thereafter.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the joint resolution (H. RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the request just received from the Senate.

The Clerk read the message, as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill of the Senate No. 1226, touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that bill will be returned as requested.

There was no objection.

CHARGES TO JURIES IN WRITING.

Mr. OATES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that where the plan suggested by this bill has been adopted in the States no lawyer would wish it changed. It has worked against the theory of many lawyers, but it has worked admirably, and it has worked in the direction of the saving of time and of safety to litigants. I was struck by a remark made by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], and I wondered that an answer which was in my mind was not given at the time, and to give it is the main reason why I rise now. If it be, as I know it is, the custom in the courts of the United States for the judges to sum up the facts, to charge the jury upon the facts, it is precisely in those courts beyond all others that it should be certainly known what the judges have said, and not have it left to their memory. Courts have no business to go far outside of the law in charging juries, and when they do go into the region of fact what they say should be in writing, and be preserved so that the court and the judges can tell whether it has been rightly said or not. Therefore, if there be any courts in which the judges do charge upon the facts, I would have this law apply to them if it should apply to no other courts in the world.

Mr. MORROW. If the gentleman will allow me, I have no objection, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] has no objection whatever to the taking down of everything that the judge says, or of everything that occurs in court. I certainly am in favor of that. I think it should be done, but we should employ stenographers for these courts if that is to be done.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Upon this question of stenographers in courts I am an old fogy. I never would allow one to come inside the court-house unless he came in a private capacity. The employment of stenographers officially in courts increases the cost of litigation immensely, and increases technical questions immensely. There is no trouble about trying any lawsuit on the bill of exceptions made from the notes of counsel if you can always have a guaranty that the charge of the court is a fixed and known fact. The presence of a stenographer at the time would not avail anything.

The purpose of this bill is to have the charge ready when the jury are ready to go out, to have it prepared so that they can take it with them as a part of the instructions which they can refer to; not to have it made up afterwards, not to have it corrected and fixed up after the jury have gone out. In regard to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] to allow the judge to be upon the bench and write a charge and then to call in the jury and explain that charge without the explanation being in writing, when you permit that you do away with the whole merit of this bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not propose that.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What was it that the gentleman said?

Mr. ADAMS. I said that everything that the judge says should be in writing.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There comes in the question as to the stenographer. I understood you to say that you objected to the judge being precluded from saying anything to the jury orally that he had not reduced to writing, but then you would give him the right to take away by oral explanation what he had reduced to writing. To that I object.

Mr. LONG. And in the case of the employment of a stenographer, you would not get his report until after the jury had gone out. It would be of no use until the trial was entirely over.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is what I tried to suggest awhile ago. It is for the benefit of the jury that the instructions are required to be reduced to writing.

One more suggestion, Mr. Speaker. No industrious judge, no conscientious and careful judge, with this law or without it, would ever refuse or neglect to reduce his charge to writing in an important case. He would not put himself in a position, even in the absence of a law like this, where counsel could say to him, "You charged thus and so," or where they could make up a bill of exceptions representing him as having said something that he did not remember saying. No, Mr. Speaker, an industrious and careful judge, with or without this law, will reduce his charge to writing, and one that is neither industrious nor careful should be made to do it when the parties demand it of him, in the United States courts as well as anywhere else.

Mr. OATES. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill, but I think it should be amended so as to require the judge in all cases to charge the jury in writing. That is now done in most of the States of this Union. It is in the line of progress, and, as has been shown by the gentleman from Ohio who preceded me [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] and others, this bill is in the line of progress because it is attempting to enforce a practice in the Federal courts similar to the practice which prevails now in nearly all the State courts of this Union. I considered this question a few years ago with reference to draughting a code, and gentlemen would be surprised to discover the progress that has been made in this regard in the thirty-eight States of this Union during the past twenty-five years. Twenty years ago the rule generally was for the judges to charge orally. Now charges are delivered orally in very few States. Congress commenced by adopting a national statute, which requires the practice in common-law cases in the United States courts in every State to comply with the practice in the State courts.

But it has been held by the Federal judges that that statute does not compel them to charge the juries in writing even where the State judges are required to do so by State statutes, because the word "inapplicable" is found in the national statute, and the Federal judges say it is inapplicable. Now, sir, I am opposed to allowing a Federal judge or any other judge to make the last speech in a trial at common law by jury. I have seen some of the ablest lawyers argue cases for two or three hours—no demagogy, no pettifogging in the argument—and after that argument was all over I have heard a Federal judge, prejudiced as he happened to be—no reflection upon him whatever—make from the bench an oral argument, called a charge, which was ingenious, which was able, and by ingenious use of the evidence and its application to a theory of law that differed from the attorneys, to overturn the whole argument that was made by the lawyers. The point made by gentlemen that a reporter can take down the charge as delivered does not reach the objection. The Supreme Court does not review the testimony or findings of fact by a jury in the circuit or district courts. If the judge in an oral charge does not sum up the evidence correctly, there is no remedy for the error.

My remarks are general in their application, for I have had the honor of practicing in a Federal court almost exclusively for many years; and the judges who preside there have no superiors in the country. But the point I desire to enforce is this: That when any man, whether a judge on the bench or a lawyer off the bench, proceeds to discuss a case orally, and warms up with the subject because he desires to see the law enforced as he views it, and reaches that point where he attempts to sum up the testimony, he will almost necessarily warp it; otherwise he has not that strength of mind which fits him for the position he occupies.

I think the Federal judges should be required to charge juries in writing, the same as required in the States where their courts are held.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to be confined to the narrow channel marked out for me by my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES]. I can say only a word in favor of this bill. It proposes to follow in this particular matter what has been the general policy of the country—that is, to assimilate the practice of the Federal courts to that which prevails in the courts of the State where the Federal court sits. A great philosophic lawyer of England has said that "reading makes a full man, conversation a ready man, and writing an exact man." To secure that exactness proper in a judicial charge the judge ought to be required to put down in black and white what he intends to say to a jury, in order that there may be no controversy about it. I am gratified to say from my experience in the administration of the law by the Federal judge in the district where I reside in Mississippi that the patient and painstaking judge there, though required by no law to do so, always reduces to writing his charges to the jury, in order that there may be no mistake as to what he intended to say.

This is a measure, as I have stated, in harmony with our general policy of requiring the Federal courts to conform in their practice to that prevailing in the respective States. There can be no reason against the measure, and there are many reasons in its favor.

Mr. OATES. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the statement of the proposition embraced in this bill to any one familiar with the practice in our courts ought to be sufficient to entitle it to support. When we consider that in the administration of justice the construction by a judge of a phrase and sometimes of a single word of a statute, or the application of the decision of the courts within the bounds of a single sentence, determines frequently the rights of parties in cases involving the liberty of person or large amounts of money and property, it ought to be a matter of surprise to any one that when a higher court is called upon to review what the judge in a lower court has said parties are frequently compelled to trust to a statement of the judge's charge as written out by him from recollection days, weeks, and often months after the charge was in fact delivered to the jury. But such is the law and practice as it exists in the Federal courts to-day. That this practice frequently results in great injustice is beyond doubt or dispute. That the injustice is in many, and in perhaps most cases unintentional is but poor satisfaction to the party wronged.

In the State which I have the honor in part to represent there was, during the first few years after I came to the bar, no law requiring the State judges to reduce their charges to writing. I recollect very well that when we wished to take a case to the supreme court of the State on writ of error, after the trial we would request the judge to write out his charge from the very brief notes he usually made at the trial. Generally the charge thus prepared would be written out weeks, and frequently months, after the case had been tried in court, and I know that often the counsel on one side or the other would contend that the charge so furnished was not the charge which was given to the jury. But in course of time the law was changed, and Pennsylvania to-day requires that every word of instruction given by a judge to a jury in her courts shall be reduced to writing and carefully preserved, so that it is exactly known what was said and done, and if error is committed, it can be corrected.

We have had quite a number of years' practice since the law was amended so as to require the charges of judges to be in writing, and I am quite certain no lawyer practicing in our courts can be found who will not concede that the change has resulted in very great improvement; that it has tended to the better administration of justice, and has aided largely in rendering the laws of our Commonwealth settled and secure.

Gentlemen who talk on this floor and know with what absolute accuracy the official stenographers report for the following day's RECORD what is said here, and who by an examination of the proof, or by a later reading of the much-abused CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, have so often been made to realize how frequently in extemporaneous speech they let slip a word or a phrase or a sentence which gives to their ideas an entirely different color and meaning from what they intended, must certainly be able to see how frequently judges wrong parties in their charges to juries in the same manner.

Mr. STEELE. Yes, members make slips.

Mr. JACKSON. It is a common expression with judges in the lower courts, as we all know, that if they are wrong in their construction of law or in their charges to juries, that their action can be reviewed in the higher courts. How often the judges allow this theory to serve as an excuse for negligence or undue haste is not for me to say.

But the superior court can only review and examine the record. How then, can the actions of the judge at a trial be reviewed unless the record shows fully, clearly, and absolutely what was said and done at the trial?

The American citizen has a right to point with pride to the high reputation for purity, ability, and integrity that the judiciary of his country has always maintained. This can be said equally well of both the State and Federal courts. I regard it as one of the surest promises of the stability of our institutions that there have been exceedingly few cases, in the more than one hundred years of our existence as a nation, in which we have had any occasion to doubt the integrity of any of the judges of our courts.

Charges of corruption, malfeasance, and disloyalty have frequently been made against men holding other official positions in the State and nation, but the judiciary has ever had the confidence of our people.

Mr. Speaker, it will be a sad day for this country, and our free institutions, if the time ever comes when that confidence is lost. Believing this as we all do, let us legislate here so as to perpetuate it and to build it on a firm and enduring foundation.

But, Mr. Speaker, entertaining as I do this high regard for our judges, I still know they are but human. They are not all even exempt from prejudice, and possibly some not even free from partisan bias. Every practicing lawyer knows how common it is for a judge to become early in a trial so impressed in favor of one side or the other of a case that he can scarcely refrain from coloring all he says in favor of that side. He can make his charge on main questions entirely correct, and yet by a few sentences on comparatively collateral matters prejudice the jury against a party so as to practically deny him justice. For such expressions of bias or prejudice there is to-day in the Federal courts practically no remedy.

This bill, requiring, if the party demands it, that all the judge says shall be reduced to writing, is a remedy for this evil.

What, then, are the objections to this bill? Some one says it is impracticable for the judges to do this unless you also furnish them with stenographers. If that be true, I for one will say, then give them stenographers; but I do not concede this. In our courts in Pennsylvania it was the law long before we had official stenographers, and even yet I know experienced, able judges who express doubts whether official stenographers are any real advantage in expediting business and fairly administering justice.

It is said it will delay trials, but I do not believe it. A competent judge can soon train himself to do this work very readily. It very likely will have the effect of making charges more brief, but this I count rather as an advantage. Much of the talk of judges in commenting on testimony might well be omitted, as it is generally more in the nature of argument than judicial construction.

I do not believe a single argument against this bill can be given, unless it be the one that some of the judges would rather not have the labor to perform, and, in fact, would prefer that all they say should not be put where it can be reviewed by their superiors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the objection made to this bill that its practical operation would be to cause delay in the administration of justice is not well taken. In the State of Illinois the practice of requiring judges to reduce their charges to writing has prevailed for many years, and it works well; it gives satisfaction to the lawyers on both sides and to the litigants. Its tendency is to require the judge to be exact and fair in the administration of the law. There can be no delay incident to this practice, for the reason that the instructions of the judge are generally prepared during the final argument to the jury. While the argument is going on the judge revises the instructions submitted by the lawyers on the respective sides, and as soon as the argument closes the judge is ready to read his instructions. I can say that this requirement has never caused delay, but has always worked to the advantage of litigants and has facilitated the administration of justice.

I wish, however, that the gentleman from Alabama would allow an amendment to be offered to this bill, so that the judges in the Territories in all cases that may come by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall be required to reduce their instructions to writing. There have been many complaints of Territorial judges taking part in the trial of cases, instead of administering the law impartially, so that the charge to the jury in many instances amounts to an argument on the one side or the other. I hope, therefore, the gentleman from Alabama will allow the wise and wholesome provisions of this bill to be extended to the Territories.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I yield for one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. I thank my friend from Alabama. I hope this measure will pass. It will operate as a wholesome restraint upon any prejudice or extravagance of statement on the part of the judge; it will subject his written exposition of the law in particular cases to subsequent examination and criticism; it will be clearer and more intelligible to the jury and better calculated to promote the end of justice. Written things remain; words are often forgotten or misunderstood.

It is the practice in my State for the courts to instruct the jury both in civil and criminal cases, and the practice is universally approved. I believe that in all cases where it is practicable the same rules of procedure which obtain in the State courts should be observed in the Federal courts, and that the practice in Federal courts should be made to conform to that of the States in which they are held. I had the honor to introduce at this and the last Congress a bill providing for an additional mode of taking depositions, so as to allow the same to be taken in accordance with the practice in force in the States where the courts are held. It passed the House in the last Congress, and has again passed in this, and I trust may ultimately become a law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. There has come to the House from the Senate a bill (S. 192) on this subject, which I ask to be taken from the Speaker's table and acted on, instead of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all States wherein by the laws thereof judges of courts of record are required to reduce charges and instructions to juries to writing, judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall conform to such practice, and such written instructions shall be taken by the jury on their retirement, returned with their verdict, and retained with the files and be a part of the record in each case.

Mr. OATES. The substantial difference before the Senate bill and the House bill is that the Senate bill requires the courts of the United States to conform to the rules and practice of the States in which they are sitting. It also requires the instructions thus given in writing shall be taken by the jury on their retirement, and shall become a part of the record. In the latter respect the bill is preferable to the one of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I think the Senate bill should not pass, and I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. OATES. I yield to the gentleman for one minute.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If the Senate bill is of the character stated by the gentleman from Alabama, I am opposed to it. Such practice as we have in the State of Illinois in reference to judges instructing juries is a practice I, for one, do not wish to see carried out in the Federal courts of Chicago and Springfield. Under our State practice the lawyers on either side prepare instructions and the judge gives them to the jury. It simply results in a series of conundrums given by the plaintiff and then a series of conundrums given by the defendant. The jury take those instructions thus prepared and retire. The instructions read, "If the jury believe so and so," then they are to find such conclusions, and it has been the observation of lawyers in the State courts that the juries have been befogged by that kind of instruction and justice has been miscarried.

If we are to have written instructions we ought not to have the State practice of Illinois ingrafted upon our Federal practice. If we are to have written instructions, those instructions should come from the judge, and not from the lawyer, either for the plaintiff or the defendant.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague is mistaken about the law in our State. I know it meets with general approval; it may be the difficulty is with the judge.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman from Alabama is that the Senate bill shall be taken up and considered instead of the House bill.

Mr. PARKER. Let the Senate bill be again read.

The Senate bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill instead of the House bill?

Mr. ADAMS. I object.

Mr. OATES. Then I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ABBOTT. I ask leave to present an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Alabama permitted the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] to offer his amendment?

Mr. OATES. No, I did not yield to any amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on the demand for the previous question, on the third reading and engrossment of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 14.

Mr. MACDONALD. No quorum. The reason why I make the point is because no opportunity has been afforded to offer amendments.

Mr. OATES and Mr. MACDONALD were appointed as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 145, noes 18.

So the previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. OATES. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to recommit the bill with the following instructions:

Add as follows:

"That on the trial of all civil and criminal cases in the circuit and in the district courts of the United States a stenographer, to be appointed by the judge, shall be employed at a compensation of $10 per day, to be paid by the United States, whose duty it shall be to report all proceedings of the trial, including the instructions given to the jury by the judge. It shall be the duty of said stenographer to extend the said proceedings taken by him in short-hand in long hand, or by type-writer when directed to do so by the court, and that the instructions of the judge to the jury shall be filed as part of the record in each case."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to amend the instructions by adding to the bill what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill:

"And if such shall be the practice in the State courts of the State within which such judge shall be holding his court."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recommit the bill with the instructions read and the amendment to the instructions proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LYNCH. I do not accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment to the instructions.

The amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. LYNCH to recommit with instructions; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 109.

So the motion was rejected.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF A SENATE BILL.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the collection and valuation thereof, and for other purposes, was ordered to be printed for the use of the House.

STAYS ON EXECUTIONS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now call up the bill (H. R. 4948) to amend section 988 of the Revised Statutes, regulating stays on executions in courts of the United States, and yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 988 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 988. That where, by the laws of a State, defendants in the courts thereof are entitled to a stay of execution, defendants in the courts of the United States held therein shall be entitled to a like stay upon the same conditions, including the giving and enforcement of bond or other security for the performance of the judgment thus stayed."

The report (by Mr. FULLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4948) to amend section 988 of the Revised Statutes, regulating stays on executions in courts of the United States, having had the same under consideration, find that the object of this proposed legislation is to provide for a uniformity in the laws of the United States and several States in reference to stays on executions, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. FULLER. I do not care to take up any of the time of the House in the discussion of this bill. The report which has been read and the bill, it seems to me, sufficiently explain themselves, and unless some gentleman desires to be heard, I shall ask for the question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill; and there were on a division—ayes 100, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. FULLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNLAWFUL GRAZING ON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now call up the bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, and for other purposes, and yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2117 of the United States Statutes at Large be so amended as to read as follows:

"Every person who drives, or otherwise conveys, any stock of horses, mules, or cattle to range and feed on any land belonging to any Indian or Indian tribe, without the consent of such Indian or such tribe, is liable to a penalty of $1 for each animal of such stock; such penalty to be recovered by civil suit as provided in section 2124 of the said Statutes at Large. When such penalty shall be recovered, the same, less costs and 10 per cent. of the amount recovered, shall be paid by the clerk of the court in which it is recovered to the treasurer of the nation or tribe of Indians which owns the land upon which the horses, mules, or cattle have been driven, or otherwise conveyed, to range or feed on the same. If the land belongs to an individual Indian, the amount of said penalty shall, by said clerk, be paid to him or his legal representatives. If a nation or tribe of Indians has no treasurer, then the amount of the penalty shall be paid by said clerk to such person as may be selected by the nation or tribe to receive it, all said payments to be made under orders of court previously made and entered of record."

SEC. 2. That this act shall be construed to apply to penalties already incurred but which have not been collected, but for the recovery of which suits at law have been or may be brought.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 4922, report the same back and ask that it lie on the table, and report herewith a substitute therefor.

The bill is an amendment of section 2117 of the Revised Statutes, which imposes a penalty upon any person who drives cattle, horses, or mules on the land of any Indian or Indian tribe to range or feed. Section 2124 of the Revised Statutes provides that such penalty, when so recovered, shall go one-half to the informer and the other be covered into the Treasury of the United States. This the committee deem manifestly unjust, and this amendment requires the penalty, when recovered, less costs and 10 per cent., which is to be retained by the Government to indemnify it against losses in such prosecutions, shall be turned over to the tribe whose lands were trespassed upon, or, if the land belonged to an individual Indian, to him or his legal representatives, under orders of the court duly entered of record.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] signified a desire to offer an amendment to this bill. I am not authorized by the committee to accept it; but as this bill was prepared by the district judge, and without reference at all to the subject to which the gentleman desires to propose his amendment, and having no objection to it, I am perfectly willing for my part that he shall have an opportunity to present it, and shall make no objection unless requested by some other member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WARNER. Before proceeding to present the formal amendment I desire to suggest an amendment in line 8 of section 1. The three words immediately preceding "thereby" in that line should be stricken out, the words "Indian or such." That would leave this provision identical with the present statute.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no objection to that. I do not desire to disturb anything that is settled, except the one thing that the bill is intended to remedy.

The amendment of Mr. WARNER was adopted.

Mr. WARNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment to the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to validate any leases or agreements heretofore or hereafter entered into between any Indian or Indian tribe or nation with any person, firm, or corporation for the use or occupancy of any Indian lands for grazing purposes."

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. WARNER. I do not. I apprehend that there can be no question as to its propriety.

Mr. ROGERS. It was not the object of the committee to in any way interfere with the question of leases in the Indian Territory, but inasmuch as two or three gentlemen are interested—I do not mean personally, but who do not desire anything of that kind to be permitted—I do not care to interpose any objection to their wishes. I do not want to disturb the question, and therefore I shall not object to the introduction of the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WARNER was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. HARE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to permit the insertion of the word "willfully" before the word "drives," in the fifth line, so that it will read, "or person who willfully drives," etc.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no authority at all from the Judiciary Committee to admit such an amendment. It was not our purpose to change or amend the existing statute in the slightest degree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Arkansas to decline to yield for this amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. I do.

The whole object, purpose, and effect of this bill is to appropriate the money which formerly went into the Treasury of the United States to the purposes of the Indians themselves, and let the penalty, when collected for such trespass, go to the Indians, which is manifestly an act of justice to them.

In other words, if persons drive their stock to graze on Indian lands the Government ought not to get the benefit of the penalty inflicted on them for so doing. Therefore, the Judiciary Committee, upon the suggestion of one of the judges who is frequently executing this law, provide that the proceeds shall go to the Indians whose lands have been trespassed upon. That is the sole object of the bill, and with that single alteration in the law it is our intention to let the law stand as it is.

Mr. HARE. If a person were to drive accidentally on those lands would he not be mulcted?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman asks if he should inadvertently drive his stock on the Indian Territory he would not be mulcted under this act. I am not aware of any such construction having been placed on the statute. I should construe the statute, if called upon to do so, that before a penalty could be inflicted it should be shown that the driving of the stock was willful, not accidentally done.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. This does not change the law in that respect?

Mr. ROGERS. It does not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Am I to understand that under the present law the whole of the penalty goes to the United States, and that this bill places the whole of the penalty in the treasury of the Indian tribe?

Mr. ROGERS. Not the whole. The bill gives it all to the Indians whose lands have been trespassed upon, less 10 per cent., which the Government retains to indemnify itself against loss in the prosecution of suits wherein the prosecution may fail.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has the gentleman considered the propriety of informers retaining a small amount of the sum? Does he not think this would stimulate the enforcement of the law?

Mr. ROGERS. Without revealing committee secrets I may say that that question was fully considered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It looks as if the statute takes away all incentive to informing.

Mr. ROGERS. I will say to the gentleman that these prosecutions are ordinarily instituted at the instance of the Indians themselves. The judge of the court, who has as kind a feeling to the Indian tribes as any one I know, thinks the penalty is due the Indians; and he prepared the bill for introduction in their behalf.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman from Arkansas permit an amendment to be offered, to insert "willful?"

Mr. ROGERS. That is an amendment I declined to yield for when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE] desired to offer it. I do not think it would change the law, but I have not the authority from the committee to allow that amendment; and it was not the intention of the committee to change the law in any way except as I have mentioned.

Mr. PERKINS. In order that there may be no uncertainty, will the gentleman allow that amendment to be offered?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not like to yield for an amendment which might change the meaning of the provision, and I am not authorized to accept it. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay; and

A bill (H. R. 5617) to provide for the leasing of premises for the Washington City post-office.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER announced as the managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for cemetery purposes, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. PAYSON, and Mr. MCKENNA.

LIENS OF JUDGMENTS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court within any State shall be liens on property in the same manner and to the same extent only as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State: Provided, That whenever the laws of the State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, before a lien shall attach, such regulations shall not apply to the judgments or decrees of the courts of the United States, unless now or until hereafter the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

SEC. 2. That the clerks of the several courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indices and cross-indices of the judgment records of said courts, and such indices and records shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of the public.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be in force in any State until the laws of such State shall provide for the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State to be liens in other counties than the one in which the said judgments and decrees shall be rendered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bills 1378, 1388, 1869, and 5626, beg leave to report a substitute.

There is no act of Congress making judgments in the courts of the United States a lien on lands. Such a lien depends upon the local laws of the State where the land lies (Kent's Com., 248, note b; Taylor vs. Thomson, 5 Peters, U. S., 358; Williams vs. Benedict, 8 How., 107; Ward vs. Chamberlain, 2 Black., 430).

Sections 916 and 967 of the Revised Statutes contain the only law of the United States bearing upon this subject, to wit:

"SEC. 916. The party recovering a judgment in any common law cause in any circuit or district court shall be entitled to similar remedies upon the same, by execution or otherwise, to reach the property of the judgment debtor as are now provided in like causes by the laws of the State in which such court is held, or by any such laws hereafter enacted, which may be adopted by general rules of such circuit or district court; and such courts may from time to time, by general rules, adopt such State laws as may hereafter be in force in such State in relation to remedies upon judgments as aforesaid, by execution or otherwise. (See 24 Sept., 1789, c. 24, s. 34.)

"SEC. 967. Judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court, within any State, shall cease to be liens on real estate or chattels real in the same manner and at like periods as judgments and decrees of the courts of such States cease, by law, to be liens thereon. (4 July, 1840, c. 43, s. 4, v. 5, p. 393.)"

It seems to be settled that in every State the judgments of the Federal courts have the same lien, to the extent of their jurisdiction, as the judgments of the highest court of the State. The following extract from Abbott's U. S. Practice, volume 2, section 249, page 154, states very clearly what the law is upon this question:

"Judgments and decrees of the national courts become liens upon the real property of the defendant, lying within the district in which they are rendered. But it is not easy to state, from the adjudications, precisely how far this lien is regulated by the local law. The existence of this lien * * * does not result from any direct legislation of Congress on the subject. But under the judiciary act of September 24, 1789, the courts of the United States have uniformly adopted the principles of State jurisprudence relative to the lien of judgments, so far as applicable.

"The extent of the lien, or the question what judgment or decree may form a lien, and what kinds of property may be holden, appears to depend upon the State law. The judgment or decree is a lien upon the property claimed, if a similar judgment or decree rendered in the State court would be a lien upon the like property. The duration of the lien was expressly made, by act of July 4, 1840, dependent upon the State law. * * * But it is not to be understood that regulations of State law, requiring a judgment of a State court to be registered or docketed in a particular manner or in a certain office or county, must be followed in respect to United States judgments. In those States where a judgment in the State courts creates a lien, a judgment in a court of the United States has that operation throughout the district to which the jurisdiction of the court extends; and State legislation modifying the lien of judgments or restricting their operation can not affect the lien. Moreover, the lien extends, irrespective of State restrictive laws, to all lands of the defendant throughout the district."

Different regulations prevail upon the subject of judgment liens in different jurisdictions, and in some of the States neither judgments nor decrees for the payment of money, except in cases of attachment or mesne process, create any preference in favor of the creditor until the execution on the same has been duly levied on the land (Ward vs. Chamberlain, 2 Black., 430). In many of the States the judgment of a State court is a lien upon lands only in the county in which the judgment is rendered and can not be made a lien in another county except by filing therein a transcript of the judgment, or by having the same docketed, recorded, or registered, as directed by State law.

In a number of the States, therefore, judgments of the Federal courts are liens upon the real property of the debtor throughout the State, without being recorded or filed in any other place than the court where rendered, while judgments of the highest courts of the State are liens only in the county in which the judgments are rendered or have been recorded or docketed. The only purpose of the proposed legislation is to place judgments of the State and Federal courts upon a perfect equality in each State, and that the same provisions of State law which regulate the docketing, registration, or recording of the judgments of the State courts shall be made applicable to the judgments of the United States courts, when authorized by the laws of such State.

The first section of the substitute reported by the committee provides that judgments of the Federal courts shall be liens in the same manner and to the same extent only as judgments of the State courts, with this proviso, that if the State laws direct a judgment of the State court to be recorded, or any other requirement to be complied with, such requirements shall not apply to Federal judgments unless the laws of the State shall so provide; and the third section does not authorize this act to be in force in any State unless the laws of such State shall also provide for judgments of the State courts to be liens in other counties than the one in which the judgments are rendered, so that this act can have no operation in any State without the consent of the Legislature thereof.

The second section provides for the proper indexing of the judgments of the Federal courts.

A bill similar to this was reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Forty-eighth Congress, but was not acted upon in the House. In the Forty-ninth Congress a bill substantially like this was reported by the same committee and passed the House, but was not considered by the Senate.

Your committee have prepared the following substitute for the several bills referred to them upon the subject, and recommend its adoption, and that the original bills lie upon the table.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I am willing now to answer any questions that may be submitted to me in regard to this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the meaning of the proviso in the first section? What is its effect?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. As I understand the bill, it provides that the liens of judgments of the Federal courts shall be upon an exact equality in each State with the liens of the State courts in such State. But as I also understand it, this act can not be enforced in any State without the consent of the Legislature of the State.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. It seems to me there are grave objections to the passage of this bill. If I understand it, it will change entirely the character of the lien of judgments obtained in the Federal courts. As the law now is a judgment obtained in any Federal court is a lien on all lands throughout the district coextensive with the jurisdiction of that court.

In most of the States, in all the States, I may say, the lien of a judgment recovered in a State court is confined to the county in which the court is situated. The result of this act is, therefore, if I understand it, to confine the lien of a judgment recovered in a circuit court of the United States to land situated in the county where the court is held. If that is so, then one of the advantages, and one of the main advantages secured to the non-resident citizen when he goes into the United States court is entirely lost. Up to this point, up to the proviso in section 1, the United States court in any State is the only court in that State in which it turns out to be impossible to secure a judgment which shall be a lien throughout the State. Now, from what the gentleman from North Carolina has already said, I take it that it was the intention of this proviso that this act should not go into effect until State machinery had been put in operation for the indexing of Federal judgments; but if I understand the plain English of this proviso it does not accomplish any such purpose.

The provision here simply is that the regulations—not the act, but the regulations with respect to indexing, recording, and registering—shall not apply to Federal judgments until the State has passed an act saying that they shall do so. So I take it that the first section of this act, the body of the section itself and the proviso if adopted, would simply legislate away the lien incident to a judgment recovered in a Federal court so as to confine that lien to the county in which the court sits; and it seems to me, sir, that that is a purpose which this body ought not to attempt to accomplish. It would be to take away from the Federal courts one of the advantages, and, as I have already said, one of the main advantages, which they furnish to citizens of other States than those in which the suits are brought.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Does not section 3 of the bill provide for the very thing that you are objecting to?

Mr. DALZELL. It does not, for this reason: Section 3 provides that this act shall not be in force in any State until the laws of such State shall provide for the judgment or decree of the courts of the State to be liens in other counties than the one in which the judgments and decrees shall be rendered. Now, I venture to say that there are few States in this Union in which there is not some provision for the judgments and decrees of the courts of that State being made liens in other counties than the county in which they were recovered if only you put in operation certain processes; but there is no provision in the State laws for putting in operation those processes with respect to Federal judgments. Hence, taking into account the third section also, the act is just as I have said it was, an act which will confine the liens of judgments recovered in Federal courts to the county in which the court sits.

Mr. JACKSON. Unless executions have issued.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, this certainly is a bill which should receive the close consideration of every member of this House. Its purpose evidently is to make a radical change in the existing law and practice as to liens or judgments rendered in the United States courts. I apprehend that I state correctly the purpose of the framer of the bill; that is, Mr. Speaker, that a judgment rendered in a United States court shall only be a lien upon real estate in the county in which a United States court is held. I think I am correct in that proposition. I would ask the gentleman [Mr. ROGERS] if I am mistaken.

Mr. ROGERS. As far as the gentleman from Missouri has gone he is correct; but he has not gone as yet to the full extent of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. So far, then, I am correct in saying that that is the purpose of the framer of this bill. I think, sir, that the language of the first section preceding the proviso does not carry out that purpose. The act reads that "judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court within any State shall be liens on property." How shall they be liens? "In the same manner and to the same extent only as judgments and decrees of State courts." Now, sir, take this language, take the plain meaning of it. In what manner and to what extent are judgments of State courts liens? I apprehend there is not a State in this Union where the judgment of a State court is not a lien upon real estate situate within the jurisdiction of that court. That is the manner.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WARNER. Wait a moment. That is the manner; that is the extent.

Mr. OATES. In my State a judgment has not any lien at all.

Mr. WARNER. Possibly in the gentleman's State a judgment has no lien.

There comes in the additional confusion, and, to my mind, the additional difficulty under this law. I speak only for my own State. A judgment rendered in what we term the circuit court (which is sometimes called in other States the district court) gives a lien upon the real estate in the county from the date it is rendered for a period of three years, and may be renewed every three years and continue a perpetual lien upon every cent's worth of real estate the judgment debtor owns in the county.

Mr. GROUT. Without any levy of execution?

Mr. WARNER. Without any levy of execution.

A MEMBER. Does that include leasehold property?

Mr. WARNER. Leasehold property of five years or more is considered the same as real estate.

But to come back to the view which I was presenting. In my own State—and in passing laws here we must take into consideration all the cases to which they will apply—in my own State the extent of a lien is through the entire jurisdiction of the court of record rendering the judgment. Then in the State of Missouri, under this bill, the judgment of a United States court would operate as a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor in every county comprised within the district of the circuit. I submit there is no getting away from this conclusion.

Mr. CANNON. Is not that the law now?

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman asks me whether that is not the law now. Yes, it is; and it is more than that. Therefore I am in favor of the bill with a restriction, if the committee gives it that interpretation. The bar and the judges in my State concede that under the decision of the United States circuit court of Pennsylvania a judgment rendered in a United States circuit court in any State is a lien upon real estate throughout that State. In Missouri, where we are transferring a great deal of real property, especially in the city where I reside, a man purchasing a lot is obliged to send to the United States circuit court at St. Joseph, the United States circuit court at Jefferson City, the United States circuit court at Hannibal, the United States circuit court at St. Louis, the United States district court at Springfield, and all the other district courts, in order to obtain the certificate of the clerk of each court as to whether there have been any judgments within the last three years entered against any of the parties.

Mr. OATES. If this bill becomes a law, and the Legislature of the gentleman's State passes an act requiring judgments to be registered in the county where they are to operate as liens, will not that obviate the gentleman's objection?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I have not relinquished the floor. I designed to yield only a few minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WARNER. I did not intend to deprive the gentleman of the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WARNER. That will be sufficient. I would have confined myself to that limit in the first place, if the gentleman had so indicated.

The third section of this bill provides:

That this act shall not be in force in any State until the laws of such State shall provide for the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State to be liens in other counties than the one in which the said judgments and decrees shall be rendered.

How a lien? A lien from the day of the rendition of the judgment? A lien from the time a transcript is filed in another county? Under what conditions will you make the judgment a lien? Will you not by this bill create confusion—such confusion that no lawyer examining a title will dare to pass upon it? Lawyers sitting around me agree with me on this proposition. What we want in these matters is certainty. We want no enactment that can be misunderstood. I am in favor of a law which shall limit the lien of a judgment of a United States circuit court to the same extent that the lien of a State court is limited; but I would provide in every case that the filing of the transcript of a judgment within a certain time in other counties shall operate as notice, and if the transcript is not filed then parties shall not be considered as having notice.

Mr. LAIDLAW. That is the State law in New York now.

Mr. WARNER. That may be the State law in New York; but we are making law for every State in the Union, and this bill does not cover that point explicitly and directly.

Mr. PERKINS. If we strike out the third section and also the proviso in the first section, would not the bill accomplish the purpose which the gentleman from Missouri favors?

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. WARNER. I do not pretend to be accurate in my construction of this bill, nor would I set my judgment against that of members of the committee who have studied it; but if the third section of the bill and the proviso of the first section were struck out, the judgment of a United States circuit or district court would, in my opinion, be a lien upon real estate in every county situated in the circuit or district where the judgment was rendered.

A MEMBER. That is what it is now.

Mr. PERKINS. I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to this language:

Shall be liens on property in the same manner and to the same extent only as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Mr. WARNER. I may have been unfortunate in conveying my views in the former part of my argument. Judgments of the State courts of Missouri are now liens on real estate within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment. Hence, if judgments and decrees of a United States circuit or district court are to be liens "in the same manner and to the same extent," they will be liens upon real estate situated within the jurisdiction of such circuit or district court.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], whose lucid statement I listened to with pleasure, and also my friend from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], who is always clear on these subjects. Each of them has stated the effect of a lien in a Federal court correctly. It is co-extensive with the territorial jurisdiction of the court. The object of this bill is simply this: That in those States where no law has been passed for the recording of judgments of State courts in other counties than the county where the court sits which rendered the judgment, and in those States also where they have made provision for recording State judgments in other counties than the one in which the court sits, but made no similar provision for recording Federal judgments, this law shall have no effect whatever.

To illustrate. In my own State the judgment of a State court is coextensive with the territorial jurisdiction of that court. The State laws have made no provision whatever in relation to either State or Federal judgments in any county other than the one where the court sits. This bill, therefore, in that State would not affect existing law. If it had the effect of limiting the lien of United States judgments to the county where the courts sit, in the absence of any State legislation for the establishment of the lien in other counties, either by recording or registering in some of the methods herein provided, I should be opposed to the bill myself.

Mr. WARNER. Pardon a question. I make simply this remark: The gentleman's construction of this law—and I apprehend that of a number of attorneys who may discuss it—shows the uncertainty of this language, and furnishes a reason why it should be made more plain.

Mr. ROGERS. It is impossible for any one in a discussion of a bill like this in Committee of the Whole to give it that analysis which we give to bills in committee. I state to my friend from Missouri, as chairman of the subcommittee which framed this bill, on the particular point I have just discussed, we gave it the most earnest and careful consideration, because my views agreed fully with the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as well as those of the gentleman from Missouri. I desired to protect my State from the operation of this bill until its Legislature has made provision for recording not only State but Federal judgments in other counties than those in which the courts sit which render them. I do not know whether the State desires the change; if not, this bill does not disturb the statu quo. If the change is desired, the opportunity is given it.

Now, in those States where the Legislatures have provided already methods of registration or indexing, or recording, as the case may be, the judgments of State courts in counties other than those where the court rendering the judgments sits, and thereby fixing liens in such counties, and have extended the provisions thereof to Federal judgments, this law does take effect. And why is such a law desirable? It is this, Mr. Speaker: In many of the States of the Union, perhaps I might illustrate by my own, some fifty or sixty counties are embraced in one judicial district. A man in the most remote corner of the State may desire to make a transfer of a piece of real estate, but the man who is to take title from him is unable to go to the county seat and examine the records and learn whether any liens rest on his land. No matter how remote from railroad communication or telegraph communication, how long it may take to get to where the Federal court is located, he must go. The object of this bill, the necessity for its enactment, as I think, lies in the fact of its convenience to the largest number of people possible.

For if it becomes law the parties can go to the county seat, and if no Federal judgment is found recorded there, they can be sure there is no lien. But now they must go to the Federal court, after having examined the county records, before there is any assurance that the title is clear, and this involves expense, delay, and trouble incalculable almost. Therefore I think the change a very desirable one that the States will be glad to avail themselves of.

For one moment let me analyze the bill. The first and third sections, to understand it correctly, must be construed together. What does the first section provide?

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court within any State shall be liens on property in the same manner and to the same extent only as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State: Provided, That whenever the laws of the State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, before a lien shall attach, such regulations shall not apply to the judgments or decrees of the courts of the United States, unless now or until hereafter the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

Hence I protested against the first section of the bill without the third.

Now, as to the proviso first. It reads:

Provided, That whenever the laws of the State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, before a lien shall attach, such regulations shall not apply to the judgments or decrees of the courts of the United States, unless now or until hereafter the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

What is the effect of this? Why, in a State court, when a judgment is rendered, the lien is confined to the county; but in a number of States throughout the Union laws have been passed so as that a judgment creditor in one county may take a transcript and have it recorded in another county, and it becomes at once a lien upon all property throughout the territorial limits of that county, and so on throughout the entire State.

Mr. RYAN. Would not the object of the bill be better accomplished if it provided that the judgment of the Federal court should be a lien from the time of its rendition in the county where it originated, and in all other counties from the date the transcript is entered?

Mr. ROGERS. If I undertook to discuss that question I should be compelled to go into the history of these lien laws.

The fact is, in brief, that there never was any legislation fixing the liens of Federal courts. It is assimilated to the practice in such cases in the State courts, and has grown up with the Federal judiciary, by conforming the practice to the laws of the several States. And I think that it is a wise thing in all of these matters, where it does not create a conflict either with some great fundamental principle or some constitutional obstacle, that all legislation regulating the practice and proceedings of Federal courts should be conformed to the State laws.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ROGERS. In a moment.

My answer to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] would be that I think it is the desire of Congress to conform judgments or liens to the procedure in the several States rather than to pass a general law upon the subject, and because, mainly, the bar, the practitioners, and the people are accustomed to that procedure.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. With pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. What would be the practice under this bill in attachment suits? Does the bill contemplate final judgments or decrees in such cases?

As the gentleman knows, it frequently occurs that parties may commence suit by attachment, and the practice is, where the attachment is sustained, that the judgment reverts back to the time the attachment proceedings commenced.

Mr. ROGERS. The bill does not disturb the present status in those regards. It was not the intention of the committee in preparing the bill to do more than regulate the judgment liens.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman to say his interpretation is that if a suit shall be commenced with an attachment in a Federal court, and prosecuted to final judgment, the lien or that will relate back to the time when attachment proceedings began?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not undertake to answer in a single word the question propounded by the gentleman, because I am not so familiar with the practice in States other than my own as the gentleman is, no doubt, himself. But in my own State the practice in that regard is not changed by the bill. The present status is not changed in any respect.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Another question—and I am asking only for information.

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly; and I am answering the gentleman candidly.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I am sure of it. In the State of Illinois attachment proceedings in the Federal courts, if prosecuted to final judgment, relate back to the time of the attachment proceedings, so that no intervening judgment against the debtor will interfere with the lien under the attachment.

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly. And in every case where property is seized by the marshal under an attachment and brought into court it is held subject to the judgment which may be rendered under such proceedings. The decisions of the Supreme Court are all to the effect that no jurisdiction can interfere with it; that the res is in custodia legis, and no power can lawfully take it from the creditor by judgment lien or otherwise as against the jurisdiction first attaching. It is held subject to the attachment, and is subject to the judgment rendered under it.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. A little further. Would that judgment in the attachment proceeding of which I spoke be a lien upon the property outside of the county in which the Federal court was sitting?

Mr. ROGERS. That would depend on the lien laws of the State. In Arkansas it would. In Illinois, as I understand the law there, it would not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the first two aspects of the bill. I think a careful and analytical construction of it will demonstrate conclusively that its results will be just what I have stated, and such is the purpose of this bill. At least that view has received the unanimous sanction of your Judiciary Committee.

Now I come to the third section of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. What would be the effect of the bill if you struck out the entire proviso of the first section? Would it defeat the object of the bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I think it would very materially.

Mr. WARNER. In what way?

Mr. ROGERS. I will state it. The question of the gentleman from Missouri is an exceedingly pertinent one. It puts the spear right into the spinal column of this bill.

Mr. WARNER. If it has one.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, if it has one. Or I may say, it is the heart of the bill. If there is any weak spot at all, the gentleman has reached it. I maintain there is not, and that the bill is perfect.

The proviso is intended to cover one class of cases. The third section is intended to cover another class of cases. Let me illustrate. In my State the Federal liens extend all over the district; the liens rendered by the State courts are confined to the county. There are no provisions of law for recording the State and Federal judgments outside of the county in which they are rendered.

The third section covers States which are in that category; but the proviso of the first section covers cases where the States have made provision for recording the State judgments in counties other than where rendered, but have not extended that provision to the Federal judgments. Therefore this bill would not operate in either case until a similar privilege is extended to the Federal as well as to the State courts.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. Then, that is the manner and extent of the judgment lien in those States in which they have provided for filing transcripts of judgments?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir, if I understand the question. The paragraph down to the word "provided" fixes the lien, but the proviso then excludes from the operation of the bill those States where provision has been made in the States to record State judgments but not to record Federal judgments. Do I make myself understood? Does the gentleman gather my idea now? I will restate it. The proviso fixes the lien throughout the Federal jurisdiction——

Mr. WARNER (interrupting). I will be candid with the gentleman from Arkansas. I think the gentleman makes himself very plain, and if the language of the bill were as clear and distinct in its statements as he is in presenting his own views I think we could get along.

Mr. ROGERS. I can but acknowledge the grace of the gentleman's statement. And now, if he will give me his attention, I will read the proviso. Let us read it together and reason together.

Mr. RAYNER. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. ROGERS. I am now answering my friend from Missouri.

Mr. RAYNER. He has finished.

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. ROGERS. I can not resist the persistency of the gentleman. I yield to him.

Mr. RAYNER. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: Under the law of your State is a judgment of the United States court registered?

Mr. ROGERS. In Arkansas we have two circuits; but in each district the judge has circuit as well as district powers. Judgments in the State court are confined to the district.

Mr. RAYNER. Suppose this law passes and your State passes no law providing for the registration of a judgment of the Federal court in any other county than where it is rendered, what is the effect? Does it not restrict the Federal jurisdiction?

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no; not at all. It does not affect Arkansas at all.

Mr. RAYNER. What portion of this law gives it the same territorial limit?

Mr. ROGERS. The first section down to the proviso.

Mr. RAYNER. But what is the effect with the proviso?

Mr. ROGERS. The proviso does not reach my State, for my State has made no provision for recording any judgment out of the county where it is rendered. But the third section applies to no other State except mine that I know of.

Now let me have the attention of the gentleman from Missouri.

Let us reason together upon this. I read:

Provided, That whenever the laws of the State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done in a particular manner or in a certain office or county before a lien shall attach, such regulations shall not apply to the judgment or decrees of the courts of the United States, unless now, or until hereafter, the laws of such State shall authorize judgments and decrees of the United States courts to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

So that this proviso, I repeat, covers that category of States where no provision has been made to record Federal judgments, but in which there has been provision made for the recording of State judgments in other counties than those in which they are rendered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made this matter as clear as I am capable of making it, unless I may have overlooked something that some gentleman may desire to inquire into.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, whilst there is no act of Congress making judgments in the United States courts a lien on lands, yet the practice of these courts, aided by some incidental legislation, has had the effect of giving these judgments a lien more sweeping than the ordinary judgments of the State courts. I know that the foundation of this lien is claimed to be based by analogy on the local laws, but fastening itself on the local law it has by judicial construction grown almost imperceptibly until it has imposed upon the people of the country a most serious and, as I believe, unreasonable and unnecessary burden. Whilst this is a subject to which my attention has heretofore been called, and about which I have felt the need of relief from Congress, yet the form and provisions of this bill have not been very carefully considered by me. But from such an examination of it as I have been able to make, and from the report of the Judiciary Committee, which presents it here for our consideration, I conclude that if it were enacted into law it would remedy at least some of the evils that have grown up under the practices of the Federal courts. And whilst I have not examined the bill so carefully as to be able to express a judgment as to its particular phraseology, and in that respect I leave others to criticise, and if need be amend it, yet I desire to call attention to some matters that will, I hope, lead gentlemen to support it. The historical fact that the character and validity of liens of judgments in United States courts upon land is based on local laws makes a great diversity in the different districts and circuits. My knowledge and information is mostly in regard to my own State, though I think that the burdens and disadvantages our people labor under in this respect are common to all the people of perhaps every State in the Union.

In the early history of the Government this matter did not attract much attention, for the reason that the people had but little to do with the Federal courts. But it is a growing evil, and one that is likely to be felt more and more severely as time passes on. In support of this statement I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that judgments are rendered now much more frequently in the Federal courts than formerly. Parties seem to prefer these courts to the State courts so far as they are able to use them. It is a matter of surprise to find how greatly the business of these courts has increased within a few years. It is a matter worthy of consideration when we come to enact laws that the business of the citizen with the Federal Government has grown very largely in the last twenty-five years. Until within that time the people have had but little to do with the United States courts.

The burdens of the Federal courts, like every other Federal burden, rested lightly upon them and were felt but rarely. It is perhaps not now necessary to discuss how the rebellion and questions growing out of it, bringing the people in different relations to the General Government and giving them a different understanding of the relations they as well as the several States occupy to that Government, has effected this change. But it is a fact, among others, beyond dispute that judgments are now entered in the Federal courts very frequently. The ingenuity of counsel, the desire of parties, and some additional legislation by Congress has encouraged and will continue to encourage this. So liberal has become the practice that not only by suits and trials in courts are judgments obtained, but in my State judgments are permitted to be entered in the United States courts, following the practice of the State courts, as I am informed, upon warrants of attorney in vacation. In this way they can be entered, not necessarily in term time nor in open court, but upon the filing with the clerk of a letter and warrant of the attorney such as is contained in an ordinary judgment note in common use among the people.

In addition to this the Federal courts are held much more frequently and in many more places than formerly. There are in Pennsylvania at least four places in which United States courts are held and clerks' offices kept, and a judgment entered in any one of those courts, according to the practice, becomes at once, and without any additional notice, a lien on all the lands of the defendant in every county throughout the State. This is a lien that affects the title and marketable quality of every parcel of land, and imposes on every purchaser the burden of expensive and difficult examinations of the records of the Federal courts. To-day it is necessary, in order to examine the title of a piece of property, even the smallest, in any county of the State, to have careful search made, not only of State records, but in the Federal courts at Pittsburgh, at Erie, at Williamsport, and at Philadelphia, and I am not sure but that in the last Congress we may have made an additional place by providing for a term of court to be held at another place.

You must at least search the records of those four places I have named before you can be certain about it. It certainly ought not to require much argument to show that there ought to be a law which would require, when judgments are rendered or entered in the Federal courts, that before they should become liens on lands outside of the county in which such court is situated, some note or record should be entered in the State court of the particular county in which the lands are situated. This is no more than is reasonable to give people warning and notice of what has been done in the Federal court.

Every lien upon land ought to be found of record in the county where it is situated. No purchaser should be required to make search hundreds of miles distant, and in several different places for incumbrances. The present law is a hinderance to the free sale and exchange of property. Its burdens fall heaviest on those least able to bear it. I observe that the passage of this bill is opposed on this floor by none except gentlemen residing where United States courts are held. I will not say that they may have constituents who might, perhaps, be reaping a benefit from the present state of affairs, but I will at least suggest that they are not so familiar with the difficulties as those who reside in other places, and far distant from the records of the Federal courts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a substitute for one which I had the honor to introduce. The object of that bill was to provide that the people of my State, and, in fact, the people of all the States, should be no longer subjected to what they consider a very unjust requirement. In the West real estate is an object of commerce. Hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of real estate are sold in the State of Iowa every day, and, as the law now stands, a buyer or a seller of real estate is obliged to go to a county far distant from where he lives, and where the property is situated, in order to ascertain whether there may not be a lien of a Federal judgment upon the property which he wishes to buy or to sell. It is not so in regard to the liens of our State courts. As has been said, the lien of a judgment in our State courts takes effect simply in the county where it is rendered, or where a transcript has been filed; and what we propose by this bill is to provide that liens of the Federal courts shall be placed upon the same footing.

There is another object which is sought to be accomplished by the second section of this bill. That is, that the clerks of the several courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indices of the judgment records of their courts. In a great many localities it is claimed that the indices now kept by the clerks of those courts are their private property, and that they do not allow parties to inspect them as they may inspect the indices of the State courts. The object of the second section of the bill is to furnish a remedy for that evil, and to provide that the indices of the United States courts, the property of the people, shall not be made the objects of a system of money-making by those who have control of them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does this bill provide that parties shall have access to those indices free of cost?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; just the same as they do to those of the State courts.

Mr. BUCHANAN. While you are rehearsing the objects of the bill, let me ask whether it is not a fact that its language is so obscure that it is almost impossible to tell what it does mean?

Mr. CONGER. I did not draw the bill. I am speaking simply of the object sought to be accomplished, and it is an object that ought to be attained by some sort of legislation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not complaining of the object, but of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I am heartily in favor of the object, but I am afraid the bill does not afford the remedy that is desired.

Mr. CONGER. If it does not, let us amend it so that it will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is nothing to amend by.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am thoroughly in accord with the purposes of this bill; but I fear that if passed in its present form it will not accomplish that which is intended. I therefore desire to offer an amendment to make the measure express clearly what I think its framers intended to declare. I send the amendment to the desk to be read.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield to have the amendment read.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If members will examine the bill as the amendment is read they will see, I think, that the bill if thus amended would accomplish the object sought.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read, as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota, the amendment which he proposes to offer at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 strike out the word "only" and insert "and under the same conditions."

In line 7 strike out the word "the" where it first occurs and insert "any."

In line 11 strike out the word "not."

In line 12 strike out all after the word "States" and insert "whenever, and only whenever."

Strike out section 3.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me read the bill as it will stand if thus amended:

Be it enacted, etc., That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court within any State shall be liens on property in the same manner and to the same extent and under the same conditions as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State: Provided, That whenever any laws of the State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done in a particular manner or in a certain office or county before a lien shall attach, such regulations shall apply to the judgments or decrees of the courts of the United States whenever, and only whenever, the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

SEC. 2. That the clerks of the several courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indices and cross-indices of the judgment records of said courts, and such indices and records shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of the public.

These amendments, I think, put the bill in intelligible language, and accomplish what is sought.

Mr. WARNER. I think that is a good amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the spirit of this proposed legislation, I am entirely in accord with it, as tending to remedy the evils which have been suggested by gentlemen on this floor. Coming from a State 400 miles in length, I appreciate the necessity of some legislation on this subject. To illustrate the existing evils, in my State the United States courts are held at Leavenworth and Topeka, which are in the eastern portion of the State. From Topeka to the western boundary of Kansas the distance is 340 miles. Yet a judgment rendered at Topeka in the circuit court of the United States becomes a lien upon a farm situated in the remotest portion of the State; so that it is not safe for a man to invest a dollar in a piece of land there until he has had an examination made of the records in the office of the clerk of the circuit court at Topeka. The people of Kansas and of other States should be protected against the evils of the existing law.

For this reason, if the bill now proposed can be made definite and plain, so that there will be no ambiguity as to the construction to be given to its provisions, I am heartily in its favor. Judgments should not be liens upon real estate, unless the judgments or transcripts of them are filed in the county in which the real estate is situated. If that is the purpose of the bill, I approve it.
